The Rev. A. S. Gregg, Field Secretary of the International Reform Bureau, had testified at the John Doe proceedings that he had lavished 50 cents on the proprietors of three well-known gambling houses in town where he had taken a flier at roulette.

"How reckless!" said the Judge. "Seems to me, though, that there is sufficient ground here for the issuance of warrants, and I will grant them to-morrow, when I will decide whether to issue John Doe warrants or have real names inserted. I suppose there was a lot of paraphernalia in these places that could be seized and used for evidence?"

"Yes," answered the preacher.

"Then I suggest that you go with the officers to-morrow and point out the paraphernalia," said the Judge.

To-night moving vans are in great demand here.

BRAIN STORM CENTRE HERE.

Up-State Legislator Says So, and That New York Needs Lunatic Asylums.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 11.—There was a lively discussion in the Senate to-day over a bill appropriating $1,000 to the Senate Lunacy Commission for the preliminary work in connection with the selection of a site for a State Asylum for the Insane "somewhere in the southeastern part of the State."

Chairman Armstrong of the Finance Committee explained that it was necessary that the institution should be established somewhere near the City of New York, as all the asylums there were overcrowded. Conditions were framing up for a vigorous resistance on the part of the Democrats, when Senator Ackroyd of Utica, himself a Democrat, said:

"The Thaw trial in New York has revealed to us the existence there of a new mental malady. I refer to the brainstorm. They will need all the asylums they can get, and we should pass this bill."

Senator Frawley (Tammany) resented the charge that New York was the centre of the brainstorm.

WOODRUFF REQUEST DENIED.

Forest Commissioner Refuses to Open Highway to His Property.

ALBANY, April 11.—State Forest, Fish, and Game Commissioner James S. Whipple to-day announced that he had denied the application of ex-Lieut. Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff for the opening of a highway across State land to permit access to Mr. Woodruff's property in Township 4, Totten and Crossfield purchase, Hamilton County, near Racquette Lake, where Kamp Killkare is located.

A first application made by Mr. Woodruff upon the ground of public necessity was denied on the ground that Mr. Woodruff had access to his property through another highway. The second application was based upon an old statute under which five acres in every 100 sold were to be reserved for highway purposes.

Secretary Wilson Shows He Erred Concerning Our Meat Inspection.

WASHINGTON, April 11.—In a statement issued at the Department of Agriculture to-day, Secretary Wilson takes issue with certain strictures recently made by A. M. Trotter, Municipal Veterinary Inspector of Glasgow, Scotland, upon the system of meat inspection in the United States.

In an official report Mr. Trotter is alleged to have said that in 1905 the number of animals slaughtered in the United States was 11,732,165, an average of 37,482 for each working day, and that the number of Inspectors was but forty, which made it necessary for each inspector to examine the carcasses of no fewer than 937 animals each day—"an utter impossibility." Secretary Wilson said that the inference was that these figures represented the entire Federal inspection Service of the United States.

"As a matter of fact," he says, "the report of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the fiscal year 1905 shows that 40,221,013 animals were inspected at slaughter in that year. The force engaged in meat inspection on July 1, 1905, according to the records of the bureau, numbered 768, exclusive of 243 microscopists."

Under the new meat inspection law, he says, the force at Chicago has been considerably increased, until it now numbers 276, of whom 71 are trained veterinarians. In the country at large, he adds, the meat inspection force numbers over 2,000.

WHISKY BOTTLED IN BOND.

Pure Food Movement Causes an Enormous Increase.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 11.—One of the most interesting results of the pure food movement against adulterated whisky, which culminated in the ruling made yesterday by President Roosevelt, is the marvelous increase in the quantity of genuine whisky bottled in bond, as shown by the Internal Revenue Bureau records.

Whisky so bottled must be of the purest straight variety, which the rulings declare to be the only kind entitled to the unqualified name of whisky. It must be bottled under the supervision of Federal officers before it can go out to the public bearing the green guarantee stamp of the United States Government over the cork.

The amount so bottled to date this year exceeds the total figures of 1906, which were 2,500,000 gallons in round numbers. From 1898 to 1903 inclusive 500,000 gallons was always the maximum annual amount. In 1903 it went to 700,000, in 1904 to 1,000,000, and in 1905 to 1,500,000.

Foreign Relief Sustaining Natives' Lives—Aid Needed Until June.

WASHINGTON, April 11.—The State Department has received from Dr. Klopsch a copy of the following cablegram received by him from the editor of The North China News of Shanghai to-day:

"Relief work proceeding at highest pressure. Four hundred thousand lives now sustained by foreign relief. Further aid indispensable until June. Officials and nobility co-operating satisfactorily."

Dr. Klopsch adds that this message clearly indicates that relief operations must continue for at least another two months if the benefits are to prove effective.

WASHINGTON, April 11.—Acting Secretary Oliver of the War Department wrote to the Attorney General to-day for an opinion as to whether or not the managers of a skating rink in Plattsburg, N. In the event of an affirmative answer a United States Attorney will appear for the soldiers.

SKENE FINDS JOKER IN THE SUPPLY BILL

It Provides $12,000 for a Consulting Engineer Who Might Overrule Him.

OFFICE NOT CREATED YET

Democratic Assemblymen Are Highly Indignant—Canal Bill Held Up.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 11.—State Engineer Skene has discovered a "joker" in a clause of the Supply bill providing funds for canal work which he believes would take from him and place with the State Superintendent of Public Works the final say in regard to canal and good roads work. The leaders of the Republican machine in both houses have been busy framing up legislation which was intended to curtail the power and patronage of the State Engineer, who is a Democrat.

Not long ago a bill was introduced at the instance of Chairman Armstrong of the Senate Finance Committee, providing for a Board of Engineers to have jurisdiction over the canal work. To-day it was discovered that there had been made a provision in the supply bill for an appropriation of $12,000 and traveling expenses for a consulting engineer to be employed by the Republican State Superintendent of Public Works to revise plans prepared by the State Engineer and Surveyor, and to perform such other duties as may be assigned to him by the Superintendent of Public Works.

Great indignation was expressed by the Democratic members when they learned of this provision in the bill. Another cause for their wrath lies in the fact that the salary provided for is almost twice that of the State Engineer. Mr. Skene in discussing the "joker" said:

"I am surprised that the Supply bill should contain a provision that the proposed Consulting Engineer who is to be employed by the Superintendent of Public Works would be given the power to revise the plans and specifications prepared by the State Engineer, as those plans have to be approved by the Canal Board, which consists of five elective officers and of which the Superintendent of Public Works is himself a member. In fact, I am surprised that the Supply bill should contain an appropriation until the office itself has been created.

"At the hearing before the Finance Committee on April 2 I stated that in my judgment it was entirely fitting and proper that the Superintendent of Public Works should have a consulting engineer, but it did not seem proper that he should have the power to revise plans prepared by the State Engineer and the Canal Board."

A bill introduced by Assemblyman Patton of Tonawanda, as Chairman of the Committee on Canals, appropriating $10,000,000 for canal work, was held up in the Senate to-day, although it had been made an emergency measure.

JOKERS IN CAR TRACKS BILL.

Otis Condemns Sheridan Measure to Remove Unused Street Rails.

The bill introduced to the Assembly by Assemblyman Sheridan providing for the removal of the tracks of surface cars, and which was favored by Charles De Hart Brower for the West End Association on Wednesday, was unqualifiedly condemned yesterday in a public statement issued by A. Walker Otis, Chairman of the same organization's special committee on the Amsterdam Avenue tracks.

Mr. Brower had said that the old Bedell bill had been opposed because Justice Amend had just rendered a decision which would have compelled the removal of the unused tracks in Amsterdam Avenue. Then, too, the Bedell bill had a clause, Mr. Brower asserted, that would make valid certain lapsed concessions held by traction corporations.

Since that time the Appellate Division had failed to sustain the Amend decision, and had said that the running of a horse car over an unused line was enough to hold the franchise for a corporation. The present Sheridan bill was a compromise, which permitted the taking up of some twenty-six miles of tracks in the city without affecting the franchise rights of the corporation.

If they had rights at the time of the track's removal they had them still after its removal; if they had none then, after the removal they still had none.

Mr. Otis, however, in his statement yesterday condemned the Sheridan bill, root and branch.

"It is," said he, "nothing more than an attempt to nullify what has been done by the West End and other civic organizations in the last three years looking toward the removal of the unused tracks from Amsterdam Avenue.

"It is identical in effect with the Bedell bill of 1905, which was at that time condemned by practically all of the civic organizations of New York City.

"The bill then and now amends section 103 of the Railroad law by permitting a street surface road under certain circumstances to discontinue the operation of its cars over any portion of its road without affecting or impairing its franchise, and to resume the operation of its cars at its pleasure.

"An action brought by the Attorney General asserting that the company has forfeited its right to the unused tracks in Amsterdam Avenue is still pending and could be tried during the May term.

"It is only necessary that the provisions of this bill should become generally known in order to insure its defeat."

OPTION BILL AMENDED.

Double Election Feature Eliminated by the Assembly.

ALBANY, April 11.—The Local Option bill, which the Assembly voted against taking from the Excise Committee last week, was amended in the Assembly today by its introducer, Mr. Winters of Tioga. He said that the amendments were made to meet certain objections expressed against the measure on the floor of the house. The bill will be reprinted and sent back to the Excise Committee.

The most important amendment strikes out the double election feature and provides that local option shall be voted upon in election districts in cities only. Under the original bill, if a city voted to go "dry" and a district voted to go "wet" the greater unit controlled. If the city voted to go "dry" the lesser unit controlled, and the district so voting remained "dry," while the balance of the city would be open to liquor traffic.

COLD TO FORAKER AT OHIO CAPITAL

Few Meet Him at the Station—Few Officials Greet Him.

SCORN FOR LONGWORTH

Says Opinion of the President's Son-In-Law Does Not Make Much Difference.

Special to The New York Times.

COLUMBUS, April 11.—Senator Joseph B. Foraker, whose advent here has been heralded for the last two weeks, arrived this afternoon from Canton. It was not one of those old time arrivale, after an absence of several years, when large delegations met him at the station, for it can be said truthfully that there was less than a "handful."

The Senator went as fast as possible to the office of Gov. Harris, at whose request the conference was held. Since his coming into office be has done much toward smoothing out the wrinkles of dissatisfaction in bis party, and it bad been taken for granted that this was his purpose this afternoon. But it was not, according to the Governor himself, who remarked at the end of twenty minutes, when be emerged from the conference, that it was just a talk on party matters in general, and neither gave any any advice as to wbat should be done.

At the Executive Chamber the reception of Senator Foraker was not more noticeable than at the station. No one called upon bim, outside of a score of employes in the various departments of the State House. Indeed, some of these were told that it would be a good idea to call upon the Senator and welcome him on account of his office, even though they were not with him at this stage. Prominent among those who paid their respects, aside from the employes, was Col. Edwin F. Glenn of the Columbus Barracks. Col. Glenn has just returned from San Antonio, Texas, where be successfully defended Major Penrose in his court-martial, growing out of the Brownsville affair.

Foraker has declared that be will fight it out with the Taft faction to the last ditch, and to do this he will accept all possible engagements to speak, especially before commercial bodies. Already he has accepted a chance to talk at Steubenville on Decoration Day, but before that time he will address audiences at Wilberforce College, (colored,) near Xenia, and at Oberlin University. He will take every opportunity possible to show the public that he is not, nor has he been, wrong in any contention with President Roosevelt. But at every instance, aside from showing his side, he will detract from the Taft boom now so well implanted in the State.

Gov. Harris is still in the middle of the road and is not losing much sleep over the Secretary of War or the senior Senator. It is certain that the Governor did not pay a return visit this evening to Foraker, but left him in the hands of his friends who paraded the hotel lobby.

Senator Foraker is to open State headquarters either here or in Cincinnati. The former is more probable, and it has been said that Daniel J. Ryan, ex-Secretary of State, will look after his interests. In a recent interview Ryan said the trouble would all be fixed up at the proper time, and Taft would be indorsed for the Presidency and Foraker for the Senate. Ryan in his early days was a follower of Foraker, but broke to the Hanna side when things went that way. He stands well in the State, however.

Many are the smiles to-night over the statement given out by Foraker when asked what he bad to say regarding the announcement of Congressman Longworth that he was out for Taft. The only comment of Foraker was:

"I don't think it of the slightest importance what Nick Longworth says about anything. I haven't any time to waste on him."

A feature of the Senator's visit to-day was a call from the Rev. James F. Patterson, State President of the Anti-Saloon League, a power in Ohio. A remark overheard in their conversation lead those in hearing distance to believe that they have been corresponding of late. To offset this, it is known tbat the Rev. P. A. Baker, National President of the same organization, has been calling regularly upon Arthur L. Vorys, the manager for Secretary Taft.

Foraker will leave here in the morning for Cincinnati, where he will begin upon a campaign of organization to round up the Old Guard or such part of it as has not already been corraled by the Taft management.

FORAKER'S SPEECH "TAME."

White House View of the Effort—Graves Finds Favor.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 11.—"A very tame affair" was the official White House comment on Foraker's campaign opening at Canton. It was intimated that the Ohio Senator had said nothing yet which required attention or reply. Anxious inquirers were referred to some of the White House commente made when the "rich man'e conspiracy" story was circulated as fully covering the Obio case so far.

It must be confessed tbat Foraker's speech failed to stir excitement here. It is hardly unjust to say that it fell flat. The statesmen and politicians read it, and then returned promptly to the paramonnt issue, the Thaw trial. But at tbe White House and elsewhere Foraker's Canton speech is accepted merely as a prelude. He is expected to go further and use stronger language as be forges into the fight.

Those who discussed the Ohio situation found the Tyler appointment more interesting than the Foraker speech, as evidence of the President'e purpose to take a hand in behalf of Taft at once, and swing the club of patronage. The Longworth declaration for Taft, carefully timed as was the Tyler appointment, is accepted as more evidence along the same lines.

The real excitement here to-day in political circles was occasioned by the speech of John Temple Graves at Chattanooga, declaring for Roosevelt as the Democratic candidate. The President offered only smiles in comment on this, but he was evidently gratified at the compliment. A number of callers congratulated him upon the incident.

MISSOURI LOSES FAITH.

Harriman Exposure Costs the President an Indorsement.

Special to The New York Times.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., April 11.—Tbe Missouri House of Representatives, strongly Democratic, to-day refused to adopt a resolution offered by Republicans indoreing President Roosevelt's fight on the trusts and corporations.

The house adopted instead a resolution indorsing W. J. Bryan for the President, and expressing the sense of the House as having lost faitb in Roosevelt since the Harriman exposure, and calling on Roosevelt to compel the Republican National Committee to return the campaign funds extorted from Harriman and the big corporation representatives.

The Republicans were greatly chagrined over the failure of their scheme to secure an indorsement of Roosevelt from a Democratic Legislature.

The paragraph expressing loss of faith in Roosevelt, and holding Judge Parker's accusations against Roosevelt to have been sustained, is an especially sad blow to the Missouri Republicans, a large majority of whom are in favor of Roosevelt for a third term.

HARTFORD, Conn., April 11.—The Senate to-day passed in concurrence the resolution indorsing the Administration of President Roosevelt, although three Democratic Senators objected. The ground of objection was that such a resolution was unnecessary.

Senator Spellacy, Democrat, said, in a speech of protest that, "The hero of San Juan Hill needs no bolstering up by the General Assembly of this State." Other Democratic Senators, in voting for the resolutions, said that they did so out of courtesy to colleagues who had invited Mr. Bryan to address the body.

NOT READY FOR ROOSEVELT.

Bryan Says the Democrats Would Take Him on Probation.

Special to The New York Times.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., April 11.—W. J. Bryan passed through this city to-day and a reporter asked him if he bad decided to follow the suggestion of John Temple Graves by putting Mr. Roosevelt's name before the next Democratic convention. His answer was:

"Not as at present advised. If Mr. Roosevelt or any other Republican is to come into the Democratic Party I think a period of probation should precede the event, just as the Methodists require of new members. If it were found that he worked satisfactorily in Democratic harness he might be formally admitted with all rights and privileges."

In a speech Mr. Bryan said:

"Mr. Roosevelt is never so popular as when he is advocating Democratic ideas, and about bsif of his time is spent in advocating these ideas. That being the case, why sbould we not have an all Democratic President rather than one wbo is Democratic but half the time? In appropriating the ideas of the Democratic Party, the President refers to them as his ideas."

DISAPPOINTED BY TAFT.

English in Cuba Expected Longer Period of American Control.

HAVANA, April 11.—Except among the members of the English colony, by whom some disappointment is guardedly expressed regarding Secretary Taft's statement issued last nigbt, there is every sign of general satisfaction with his remarks.

The Englishmen say the Secretary's statement only guarantees good business for a little over a year, and that by the end of twelve months it will be necessary to retrench, owing to the uncertainty about the new Government. It is plainly evident that Englisb intereste anticipated a statement assuring them a longer period of American control.

Spanish commercial interests are pleased because they consider Secretary Taft's statement concerning the tranquility tantamount to an assurance of American control for several years.

American commercial and banking interests are more hopeful than the English. The Americans declare tbat Mr. Taft's words mean at least one year of continuous business, during which time political passions will probably die out. They believe the Cubans, recognizing the certainty of American intervention if they do not keep the peace, will make a strong endeavor to do so.

One thing responsible for the lack of enthusiasm on the part of the Englieb residents is the question whether or not Cuba will be obliged to pay for the damage done to property in the last revolution. As Englisb interests suffered more in this direction than those of any other foreigners, this matter is considered by them to be grave.

The Cuban press generally expresses satisfaction with Mr. Taft's declaration of policy.

No one has yet been selected to fill the post of Secretary of Porto Rico, made vacant by tbe promotion of Mr. Post.

RING SLANDER SUIT BEGINS.

Miss Raymond Demands $20,000 Damages—Defendant Played Detective.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., April 11.—It developed in the trial to-day in the Supreme Court of the action of Miss Grace Raymond, a former Sunday school teacher of Mount Vernon, against Mrs. Naomie Duncombe Ring, reputed to be the richest woman in Mount Vernon, for $20,000 damages for slander, that Mrs. Ring, who is more than 60 years old, hsd done detective work in watching her present husband, Patrick J. Ring, and tbe plaintiff.

Miss Raymond alleged that the slanderous names were uttered against her on a public street at Mount Vernon, and that sbe and Mr. Ring were punched by Mrs. Ring. Miss Raymond testified that on the morning of June 28, 1904, she was on her way to church. She met Mrs. Ring, who, the witness said, seized her by the arm and called her bad names. They met Mr. Ring in the street by chance, and, according to the plaintiff, Mrs. Ring exclaimed, "There, I have caught you!" and struck her and pushed her into the street, calling her more names.

"About a month later," said Miss Raymond, "I met Mrs. Ring on Elm Avenue. She said she would settle with me. I told her I would settle for $5,000, but tbat she would bave to make the settlement through my lawyer. She said then she could only pay $3,000, as she bad been under a great expense biring agents to watch me. She told me she had lost $75,000 on the races, and sbe couldn't pay sucb a big sum."

Patrick Donovan, sexton of the Sacred Heart Church, testified that be saw Mrs. Ring attack Miss Raymond. Mrs. Ring was also called as a witness in her own behalf. She glared angrily at her husband, wbo sat next to Miss Raymond.

"Gentlemen, I give you my honor," ehe said, "tbat I never touched her. I heard she had been spending every Sunday in the opera bouse and I went there to investigate. I went there that morning to catch her. One time I bid in a box in the old opera house."

resented bonds, but I had never seen tbese bonds.

"I cannot feel that I own a mountain. I don't think any man can really feel he owns a stretch of land. Let him walk over mountaine or heather and say to himself, 'These mountains are mine,' and he will not be able to make himeelf understand the meaning of the words. So it is impossible to make one's self understand that he owns a great fortune.

"I don't miss the money I gave. So far as I know there are as many bonds in the safe deposit vault as there were before."

Mr. Carnegie delivered this remarkable speecb in the most impaseioned way with his eye glasses thrust back over bis head, and his arms gesticulating. At times in it he was vigorously applauded, but for the most part the audience sat silent, not unsympathetically, but rather as if unable to quite take it in. Having said tbis, be walked back to the speaker's table, picked up bis manuscript, pulled down his glasses over his eyes and began his prepared speecb.

The proceedings began at 9:45 A. M., when Chairman Frew received the guests in the Founder's room. At 10:30 A. M. came the municipal reception to visiting guests by Mayor and Mrs. Guthrie, assieted by Mr. and Mrs. Carnegie. At 11:30 came the academic procession from the Hotel Schenley to tbe institute, under escort from the Faculty and students of the Carnegie Technical Scbools. At 2 o'clock the dedication exercisee began in the musio hall, and at 3 o'clock the rest of tbe buildings were thrown open to the general public. To-nlght tbere was a concert of the Pittsburg Orcbestra, led by Emil Paur, and here one of the features was the appearance of Sir Edward Elgar to conduct one of his own compositions.

Sun Shone on Procession.

It had been a chill morning, looking like rain. Toward the time set for the procesion of notables, however, the sun came out in a timid sort of way, and the crowd cheered up. It was not so big a crowd as was expected, by the way. Tbe streets were roped off, but the ropes hung limp, with not many people pressing against them in a good many places, and the large force of policemen had no trouble in keeping order.

Gen. von Loewenfeld, escorted by Gen. Bell, who had been detailed by President Roosevelt to act as his escort, came in full uniform, and was the centre of obeervation. A majority of the other notables came in caps and gowns, the management having requested that everybody who was entitled to wear the university costume ehould do so. In a good many casee tbe appearance of some well-known politician, office bolder, or business man in cap and gown seemed to astonisb the street crowd greatly. Tbe notables began to come into the hall at 2:15.

The seating went on rather elowly, and it was 2.40 before the climax was reached with the arrival of Andrew Carnegie. As he came in the whole assemblage, including the foreign guests, stood up to receive him and cheered. Then Mr. Heinroth played his organ 'chorale; after which a lesson from the Bible, Proverbs iii., 9-27, was read by Dr. John Rhys, Principal of Jesus College, Oxford. After this there was an invocation by the Rev. Dr. E. S. Roberts, Master of Gonville and Caius College, and Vice Chancellor of Cambridge.

Letter from Mr. Roosevelt.

The following letter from President Roosevelt was then read:

White House,
Washington, D. C., April 11, 1907.

My Dear Sir: I am not able to be present myself witb you, therefore let me, through you, express my appreciation of the great work done by the founding of the Carnegie Institute. Wealtb is put to a noble use when applied to purposes such as thoee the Carnegie Institute is so well designed to serve. Every such institute, every foundation designed to serve the educational uplifting of our people, represents just so much gain for American life, just so much credit for us collectively as a Nation. The success of our Republic is predicated upon the higb individual efficiency of the average citizen, and the Carnegie Institute is one of these institutions which tends to bring about this high individual efficiency.

Many things go to make up such efficiency. There must be a sound body; there must be physical bardihood and address in the use of trained nerve and muecle. There must also be a high degree of trained intellectual development, a bigh degree of that intelligence which can only be obtained when there is both power to act on individual initiative and power to act in disciplined co-ordination with others. And, finally, there must be that training on the moral side which means that production in the averago citizen of a high type of character—the character which sturdily insists upon rights, and no lese whole-beartedly and in the fullest fashion recognizes the fact that the performance of duty to others stands even ahead of the insistence upon one's own rights.

Through you I extend my heartist congratulations to Mr. Carnegie, and my wishes that he may have many happy returns of this day, together with the acknowledgment which all of us must make of the public service he so signally renders when he founds institutions of this type. Sincerely yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Mr. S. H. Church, Secretary Carnegie Institute, Pittsburg, Penn.

The audience did not applaud the introduction of this letter, but applauded it liberally at the close. Still there had been no great enthusiasm for anybody before Mr. Carnegie rose to make his speecb, which he did after the reading of the President's letter. Neither nad there been any of the usual whispering and laughing while the audience had waited for the exercisee to begin. In fact, the audience bad seemed peculiarly impressed with the solemnity of the occasion to the exclusion of any other characteristic.

Mr. Carnegie made the opening speech given at the beginning of this dispatch, and then proceeded with his set speech, which was in part as follows:

"Eleven years ago etanding here I handed over the institute to Pittsburg, then a bold experiment, a combination of library, art gallery, museum and hall of music, never, as far as I know, having been attempted before. The city was to maintain the library, and let me say in passing, most generously has she done so, including seven branches erected to meet the wants of her swelling population. I congratulate her upon being among the foremost cities of the world in public library development—certainly there is none superior."

Tbe speaker then took up the history of tbe establishment of the library eystem and the development of the Institute idea, adding:

"Here it was that fortune came to me, and it is as a Pittsburger I have labored for Pittsburg. This institute is built by a Pittsburger with Pittsburg money for Pittsburg. You all know the beneficent results which have followed."

Mr. Carnegie then directed his remarks to each of the departments and compliMented the Directors for their work and success. Continuing, he eaid:

"Our ceremony of to-day embraces the Technical Schools, which are also in a sense now to be formally opened. These are part of the institute, and no mean part. I am told there are to-day 1,590 students—young men and young women—and several thousand waiting admission. In every department there exist obvious proofs of intense earnestness, great esprit de corps, and a determination to profit by the advantages offered. Already there have been developed strong feelings of pride and love of the echools.

"Thus, ladies and gentlemen, wherever we look around ne, in every branch of the institute, we find success written in large and unmistakable letters. Tbe tree has borne good fruit abundantly year after year in the past and promises to continue doing so increasingly year after year, generation after generation to come, the end of which no man can foretell.

"Judged by the past, the future promises well. There is no question of Pittsburg's continued growth, no indications that she will not retain her commanding position as a manufacturing city, foremost in certain important lines, and in my view there is no question of the continued growth and usefulness of tbe institute.

Duty for Future Wealthy Men.

"In after days, when the founder becomes merely a name, as Harvard and Yale and Cornell and many founders are to-day, the future Pittsburg millionaire, loyal to the city where he has prospered, will see that his bequeste can be best bestowed upon needed extensions or new departments or collateral institutions now unthought of. It will become more and more the fashion—may I not say the duty?—of Pittsburgers to consider what return they can make to tbe city which has done so much for them. Wealth will he less prized for itself in future generations, and the chief aim will be to bestow it wisely and, I might add, justly, for surely the city where wealth is made has, after the family, first claim. When this is realized Pittsburg will be abundantly supplied and this institute will become the precursor of other institutions as needed—the gifts of Pittsburg wealth by Pittsburg men for Pittsburg's good.

"There is room for many things of the spirit in our city. Things material are abundant. Our mills and factories, numerous, large, and prosperous, but things material, including money itself, should only be the foundation upon which is reared things spiritual. Our mines of coal and iron have not completed their mission when transmuted into articles for use, and these into dollars. All le still upon the material plane.

"Not until the dollars are transmuted into service for others in one of the many forms best calculated to appeal to and develop those higher things of the moral, intellectual, and aesthetic domain has wealth completely justified its existence. Dollars are only droes until spiritualized, a means to an end, and miserable is the man, mean and squalid his life, who knows no better than to deaden his soul by mere possession, counting over the hoard which holds bim down, or using his faculties in old age in augmenting tbe useless stuff which ministers not to any taste worthy of man.

"There is surely to arise from the wealth created here a body of men who will find in the distribution of their gains where they were made the genuine reward which surplus wealth can give, the knowledge that it is certain in after years to elevate, refine, and purify the livee of those who succeed us, and that we have left one spot of earth at least a little better than we found it."

Mr. Carnegie then expreseed bis thanks to tbe Board of Trustees, to the heads of departments, the press, and lastly the guests, especially the visitors from foreign lands, and in conclusion said:

Tribute to the Kaiser.

"It will not be considered invidious if special mention be made of the interest displayed in our institute by that remarkable man, the German Emperor. We owe him much for sending Gen. von Loewenfeld as his representative, Secretary of State Moeller, and other eminent men. We ask them to convey to tbe Emperor the profound acknowledgments of all interested in the institute. We earnestly wish for him a long continuance of the reign of peace and prosperity which has so far blessed his eway, for be it remembered to his credit that long as he has reigned his hands are guiltless of human bloodshed in international war. Let us also remember tbat our technical schools have Charlottenburg to follow as models. We cannot forget what we owe to Germany as teacber of the nations in industrial education.

"We cannot omit recognition of the valued congratulatione brought to us by the friends from our sister republic of France, to whom our country owes an unpayable debt. One cannot imagine the two republics at variance upon any subject whatever, and as we have had Germany as teacher in industrial development, we have had for our art department the guidance of France, the leader in all things artietic.

"One of my oldest and dearest friends, Mr. Joseph Wharton of Philadelphia, was present when the original institute was handed over to the city, and is with us to-day. He recently reminded me that I then closed with certain words whicb he recited with such oratorical effect as I can only attempt to imitate. I shall repeat them to-day: Take, then, people of Pittsburg, this Institute from one who loves Pittsburg deeply and who would serve her well."

Toward the close of his speech, Mr. Carnegie again departed from his manuscript to deliver a striking eulogy of the German Emperor. As he did so he turned his back on the audience and addressed himself directly to the German visitors on the platform, particularly to Gen. von Loewenfeld, wbo immediately began taking it down on the back of his programme.

"That remarkable man," said Mr. Carnegie, "is very like another remarkable man in our own country, very much alike these two men are."

Then he asked the German visitors to take back witb them the affections of himself and his hearers for the Kaiser.

"For let it be remembered to his credit," cried Mr. Carnegie, "that long as he has reigned his hands are guiltless of blood sbed in any international war. That is the reason I think tbe Emperor the coming man of destiny and that he will perhaps perform a miracle. He has it in his power to abolish war.

International Police Force.

"American, Britain, and France will join him in creating an international police force to tell the other lands of the world that since the world has become inter-dependent no nation has a right to disturb the general peace of the world. That is true. The German Emperor could do that to-day at The Hague Conference, and he would find power to rally behind bim."

When he had concluded Mr. Carnegie was again cheered, and again did the whole audience rise to applaud bim.

Theodore von Moeller, Minister of State, from Germany, followed with an address on "The Popular Significance of the Carnegie Institute." After bim came ex-Finance Minister Doumer of France, the only one who spoke in any other language than English. Baron Estournelles de Constant, the French Senator, who has so endeared himself to Mr. Carnegie by his constant war for peace, followed with a speech on "The Organization of Peace."

The formal exercises were brought to a close for the day with the announcement of the prize winners in the International Art Exhibition. Following are the successful painters, amount of awards, and title of pictures:

First Prize, Gold Medal and $1,500.—Gaston La Touche, Paris, France, "The Bath."

Second Prize, Silver Medal and $1,000.—Thomas Eakins, Philadelphia, Penn., "Prof. Leslie W. Miller."

Third Prize, Bronze Medal and $500.—Olga de Boznauska, Parie, France, portrait of a woman.

The following received honorable mention: Lawton S. Parker, Chicago, portrait of an English girl; W. Granville-Smith, New York, "The Old Mill"; Maurice Greiffenhagen, London, England, portrait of his wife.

The foreign guests have not been away from their hotels to any extent since they arrived, and the people of Pittsburg have not had much chance to see them. This is because they have been kept so busy with the dedication ceremonies. The most conspicuous of them all is William T. Stead, who goes dashing about the Hotel Schenley as happy as a cricket, talking incessantly to everybody. Last night be wore red slippers. To-day, so many people, attracted by his prominence and ubiquity, came up to ask his name, that Mr. Stead adopted the unusual device of pinning his visiting card on the lapel of his coat so as to save answering.

Foreign languages of all sorts are epoken at tbe Schenley, where most of the foreigners are housed, and the lobby sounds a good deal like Babel. One of the most noticed of the frequently flitting figures is Gen. Count Spiridovitch of Russia, a lean man with uplifted mustache. He is as busy as Mr. Stead, only he is busy explaining about himself, whereas Mr. Stead can explain about anything.

Maartens Maartens, the Dutch novellst, was probably the most eagerly sought after figure there. Everybody wanted to have him pointed out. At the dedication ceremonies he had a prominent position near to Mr. von Ihne.

As a rule Sir Robert Ball and the French and German scientists hob-nobbed, while the statesmen and diplomats flocked together.

BIG ORGAN NOT UP TO DATE.

Heinroth Finds Carnegie Hall Instrument Needeb Improvement.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 11.—The magnificent pipe organ in the Music Hall of the Carnegie Institute was tried this morning and found wanting. The organ is not up to date, says Charles Heinroth of New York, the new organist, who will begin his duties here next October. He is a Founder's Day guest, and presided at tbe great organ in Carnegie Music Hall this afternoon.

Mr. Heinroth intends to make a number of suggestions that will add greatly to the tone of the instrument.

"Great improvements have been made in organ building during the last ten years," said Mr. Heinroth, "and while the organ in Carnegie Music Hall is a great instrument, it can be made greater. It needs some new base pedals and some of the latest mechanical appliances which no doubt will greatly improve its tone."

Mr. Heinroth, Sir Edward Elgar, and Emil Paur, director of the Pittsburg Orchestra, are especially interesting to tbe musical people of Pittsburg. Mr. Heinroth is much younger than either of the other two, and, in fact, is the youngest man ever engaged as organist at Carnegie Music Hall.

BROKE 61-YEAR-OLD THIRST.

Sir Robert Cranston, Toasting Carnegie, Slipped Off the Wagon.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., April 11.—Sir Robert Cranston of Edinburgh, Scotland, has the camel beaten. For sixty-one years he went without a drink—that is, a drink of anytbing considered here as worth while—but now he is off the water wagon.

The dedication of tbe new Carnegie Institute, the gift to the people of Pittsburg from his distinguished brother-Higblander, was much, and Sir Robert slipped. It was merely a slip, for one glass of claret was the extent of the Scot's dissipation, but it created no end of feet among the foreigners and Americans who are here for the dedication.

With others of the distinguished guests, Sir Robert Cranston was in the bar of the Hotel Schenley last night, when some one proposed a toast to the "Laird of Skibo." Sir Robert hesitated for a minute, and then, thinking over the oceans of mineral watere he has consumed, be winked at the bartender and remarked, "A little claret, please."

"I never had a drink of alcoholic liquor in my life until now," he said. "Not even Scotch whisky. While Lord Provost of Edinburgh, I had a fine reputation as a consumer of what you would call soft drinks, but when the toast to Mr. Carnegie was proposed to-night, I broke my sixty-one years' thirst."

Lady Cranston heard tbe news before Sir Robert left the bar. When she saw him ehe smiled and remarked:

"I have heard all about you; you're becoming a terrible inebriate."

THE INSTITUTE BUILDING.

Beautiful Marbie Structure Covers an Area of Four Acres.

PITTSBURG, April 11.—The Carnegie Institute, which is dedicated to literature, art, music, and science, rises a glietening edifice of marble from the greensward of Schenley Park, one of tbe moet beautiful in the park system of tbe city. Situated on Forbes Street, near tbe Grant Boulevard, the building faces the south, and with its wings and extensions covers an area of four acres, while with the three floors there is a space for the various departments of sixteen acres, exclusive of two basements and the power house.

The total cost of the institute, which occupied thirty months in construction, was $6,000,000. There is no woodwork in the whole building. Twenty-five thousand electric lights and 200 miles of wiring are controlled by one of the largest switchboards in the world, and the heating and ventilating plant is one of the moet elaborate and scientific in the world. In the library the new bookstacks are eleven stories high, and have a capacity of 800,000 volumes, while the entire capacity is 1,500,000 volumes. The art galleries cover 44,700 square feet, and the museum 104,000 square feet.

Doing Today's Work Today

THE man who has his desk littered with yesterday's business has no time to plan for tomorrow's. The man who must answer his mail when a stenographer is available rather than when he is in the mood for doing it, is always doing yesterday's work tomorrow.

Having an Edison Business Phonograph is like having a competent stenographer continually at your elbow. You can dictate or you can think without interfering with anybody's work, and you can do so with the knowledge that your letters will be got out more quickly and more accurately than under your present method.

We never urge the adoption of the Edison Commercial System. We merely want to demonstrate what it will do. There is no cost and no obligation involved.

CROMER, THE MAKER OF EGYPT, RESIGNS

Announcement Entirely Unexpected—Ill-Health Cause of Retirement.

TRIBUTES IN PARLIAMENT

Sir Edward Grey and ex-Premier Balfour Speak with Deep Emotion—Sir Eldon Gorst to Succeed Cromer.

LONDON, Friday, April 12.—Foreign Secretary Grey made the most unexpected announcement in Parliament yesterday that Earl Cromer, Great Britain's great plenipotentiary on the Nile, had resigned owing to ill-health, and that Sir Eldon Gorst had been appointed to succeed him.

It had been known for some time that the health of Lord Cromer, who has been British Agent and Consul General in Egypt since 1883, was affected, but there was no idea, when he issued his voluminous report on the progress of the administrative departments of the Egyptian Government early this month, that his retirement was impending.

Sir Edward Grey, in making the announcement, and ex-Premier Balfour, who followed him, spoke with deep emotion of Lord Cromer's unexampled services to the empire, and voiced the nation's regret at his leaving his post in such a difficult period, the Foreign Secretary declaring that it was the greatest personal loss the public service of the country could suffer.

The retirement of Lord Cromer will involve no change in British policy with regard to Egypt. This was explicitly stated by Sir Edward Grey in the House of Commons to-day in making the announcement of Lord Cromer's resignation. Continuing, the Secretary stated that he made the announcement to the House with such deep regret that he thought it would be best to read it in Lord Cromer's own words, as follows:

"I have arrived at the conclusion that I must ask you to accept my resignation. I have done so after very full consideration, and after consultation with my medical advisers.

"I am most anxious that it should be particularly understood that the reasons which induced me to take this step were wholly due to the state of my health, and that no political considerations of any kind whatever are in any way connected with them. More especially, I desire to say that nothing could be more effective or more generous than the manner in which the present Government has supported me.

"It has been a very great pleasure for me to serve under you and it is with extreme regret that I shall break my official connection with you. After spending, however, forty-nine years in the Government's service I am thoroughly worn out and really unable to support any longer the excessive strain which my work here entails. I feel also that I do not possess the health or strength necessary to do justice to all the very important interests involved. Both my doctors quite agree that it is necessary that I should give up my work."

Sir Elden Gorst has been appointed to succeed to the post in Egypt on the advice of Lord Cromer, whose complete confidence he possesses. His takes up a difficult task, but will assume the work with the full approval of offical circles, both in London and Cairo. Sir Elden had twenty years' experience in Egypt, first in the diplomatic service and afterward, from 1890 until 1904, in the service of the Egyptian Government. He had charge successively of nearly all the great administrative departments and had close personal relations with Lord Cromer.

Lord Cromer's Career.

If you want information about Egypt in the Almanach de Gotha you must look under the head of Turkey, of which power it is still nominally a dependency, and if you desire to know Lord Cromer's official status you will find his name in the Corps Diplomatique as "Agent Diplomatique et Consul Général." Most of the other powers have officials at Cairo with similar titles.

So much for poetry. As a matter of fact Lord Cromer has been the ruler of Egypt for about a quarter of a century—a ruler almost as absolute as an Emperor.

England's position in Egypt has long been the greatest paradox in the world of diplomacy, and Lord Cromer himself has been, personally, quite as puzzling a paradox. He looks something like Cruikshank's pictures of Mr. Pickwick—good natured, and fat, and lazy. His manners are so mild that it is almost impossible to believe that he can be firm. His demeanor is genial and courteous, and he talks with what seems the most extreme candor, with a tendency to break into a roar of laughter at every other sentence.

This is the man whom the British call the "maker of Egypt" and whom the French used to call the "perfidious Baring," the incarnation of Machiavellian statesmanship, the consummate master of intrigue, the personification of England's ability to grasp and retain. But even the French—who have the most cause for complaint—no longer try to minimize the marvelous things that Cromer's administration has done for Egypt.

It is a clear record of genius, of capacity for administration, of mastery of minutest details. It is a record, too, of ability making its own opportunity, for Cromer started with no influence worth speaking of. He was very much a younger son. He is the tenth son of ths lats Henry Baring, M. P., himself the third son of ths first Sir Francis Baring. He and his brothers wers put into the diplomatic service or the army to carve out their own careers. Evelyn Baring, now Lord Cromer, entered the Royal Artillery, and had attained only the rank of Major, when, in 1880, he was appointed Financial Member of the Council of India. He was then 39 yesrs old. The position was a most difficult one, and Baring surprised every one by the hold cleverness with which he took up his work. He struck out a line of his own, which has been followed by all his successors, and made three Indian budgets which are regarded as the most successful sver presented.

In 1883 he was removed to Cairo. He had previously hsd some experience in Egypt as one of the Controllers General of Egyptian Finance, his colleague being a Frenchman, but in those days Egypt meant little to England, and Baring's work was quite unrecognized. It was his record in India which obtained for him the post of Agent and Consul General in Egypt.

Cromer's Work in Egypt.

What he has done there is so well known as hardly to need recapitulation. When he went to Egypt the country was bankrupt, the fellaheen were in a condition of abject misery, ths puhlic services werc more corrupt than in China or San Francisco, and justice was bought and sold. Cromer—who was elevated to the peerage in 1892 and created an Earl in 1901—has changed everything. The taxation of the fellaheen bas been reduced to a minimum, forced labor has besn abolished, justics is administered according to a regular and legalized code, the rights of property are for the first time in the history of modsrn Egypt recognized by law, and, abovs all, the country has been put on a paying hasis. Only to mention one of the works that Cromer has established, a system of irrigation has been introduced which is a model for the world.

And with all this work on his hands Cromer has also had to cope with foreign intrigues, to deal with refractory native officials, to curb an impulsive and rather foolish young Khédive, and to keep a sharp eye on conspiracies of the most ingenious character originating in the Yildiz Kiosk and the Sublime Porte.

Sir Eldon Gorst, who succeeds Lord Cromer in Egypt, has been Assistant Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs since 1904. He was born in New Zealand in 1861 and entered the Diplomatic Service of Great Britain as an Attaché in 1885. He was Controller of Direct Taxes for the Egyptian Government in 1890, Under Secretary of State for Egyptian Finance in 1892, Adviser to the Egyptian Ministry of the Interior in 1904, and Financial Adviser to the Egyptian Government, 1898-1904.

BUELOW'S ACT ILLEGAL.

Interference in Election Costs a Conservative His Reichstag Seat.

Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1907, New York Times Co.

BERLIN, April 11.—The Electoral Commission of the Reichstag has declared illegal the election of Herr von Richthofen, a Conservative, on the ground that Prince Bülow, the Imperial Chancellor, used undue influence to bring about his election by sending a telegram to a newspaper published in Herr von Richthofen's district. The Electoral Commission reached its decision by a vote of 7 to 6.

In the telegram referred to the Chancellor appealed to the members of all bourgeois parties to support von Richthofen against the Socialists. Von Richthofen was elected by a large majority.

The semi-official newspapers are remarkably silent this evening in regard to the commission's decision.

MAY BAR OUR TYPEWRITERS.

Proposal to Exclude Them from German Military Offices.

BERLIN, April 11.—In the course of the discussion by the Budget Committee of the Reichstag to-day of the appropriation to purchase typewriting machines for the military authorities, Dr. Sudekum, Socialist, introduced a motion providing for the exclusion of American machines, "because of the prohibitive effect of the American customs duties on German goods."

Herr Paasche, National Liberal, First Vice President of the Reichstag, supported the motion.

NOT TO LEAVE OUDJA YET.

France Will Stay Until Her Demands Are Fully Satisfied.

PARIS, April 11.—According to the official advices the occupation of Oudja by the French troops appears likely to last longer than was at first considered probable.

M. Regnault, the French Minister to Morocco, has replied to the attempts of the Sultan's representatives at Tangier to enter into negotiations that France is determined to maintain in their entirety her demands for reparation and would not even consider proposals for partial satisfaction.

A messenger has left Tangier for Fez to convey this message to the Sultan, whose reply cannot be received in less than a fortnight.

PARIS BANKER MURDERED.

Emile Benoist Assassinated by a Discontented Customer.

PARIS, April 11.—Emile Benoist, a well-known banker of this city, was shot and killed to-day in the office of a financial newspaper of which he was the editor.

The assassin, a discontented customer named Carroit, fired ten shots from a revolver point blank at M. Benoist.

ABBE JOUIN ON TRIAL.

Prosecutor Reads Letters from Montagnini—Case Adjourned.

PARIS, April 11.—The Abbé Jouin, rector of the Church at St. Augustin, was brought up in a police court to-day to answer the charge of incitement to rebellion from the pulpit in connection with the taking of the church inventories. Ths court was crowded in consequence of the expectation that revslations regarding the case were contained in the documents seized at the Papal Nunciature, and that the Prosecuting Attorney would probably read them.

The Abbé, replying to the Magistrate, declared that he had never transgressed the laws.

Ths Prosecutor read letters of Mgr. Montagnini which, he said, demonstrated that the formsr Secretary of the Nunciature was continually intriguing in order to hinder ths French clergy from obeying the Church and State separation law, and that he acted as ths real head of the Church in France.

The court will rendsr judgment April 13.

PARIS STRIKE A FIASCO.

Only 600 Bakers Out—Belief That the Trouble is Ended.

PARIS, April 11.—Everything indicatss to-night that the strike of ths hakers is to all intents and purposes over. The city to-night wears its usual aspect. No soldiers are to he seen, only the ordinary patrolmen being out.

The bakers held a meeting in ths Labor Exchangs at 10 P. M., but there wers fswer men present than at a meeting in the morning. This would seem to indicate a general resumption of work, which is confirmed hy a statement issued from ths Prefecture of Police at 11 o'clock to-night that only 600 defections had been recorded in Paris and ths district. This number is inconsiderable, as there are 2,500 hakers in Paris alone. Nevertheless, as a measure of precaution, the bakeries will be guardsd to-night in view of possibis attempts to molest the workers.

The bakers of Toulon have voted to go on a general strike to-morrow unless their demands are granted.

Telegrams from the provinces indicate that the strike movement up to the present has resulted in a fiasco.

REQUIEM FOR PETER THE GREAT'S SON

Czar Honors Memory of Reactionary Czarevitch Who Was Executed.

STOLYPIN THREATENS DUMA

Guards to Carry Out His Orders—Golovin Suspends a Monarchist Member of the House.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 11.—For the first time in history a requiem mass was celebrated to-day for the Czarevitch Alexis Petrovitch, whose tomb under the tower of the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul has been restored by the order of the Emperor.

Ths requiem was on the initiative of Emperor Nicholas and it was attended hy a number of Conservative members of the lower house. Alexis Petrovitch was a son of Peter the Great. His father ordered his execution because of his participation in reactionary plots to destroy his reforms.

President Golovin of the Lower House of Parliament has followed up yesterday's letter to Premier Stolypin with a communication protesting against the presence in the halls of Parliament of representatives of the Palace Guard, who are controlled by the Central Police Administration. According to the parliamentary statutes, the police have no right to enter the precincts of Parliament unless requested to do so by the President.

M. Stolypin's answer to the first letter of M. Golovin has been received. The Premier brusquely reiterates his demand for the exclusion of outside experts from the committee, and intimates that he will order ths Palace Guards to exclude them from the sessions of the committee in case of necessity. Ths Premier adds that ths regulations of the preceding Parliament, on which the claim to employ experts was based, wers never published, and had no legal status. Finally, the Premier explains that his action in writing to M. Golovin was inspired by a desire to come to an agreemsnt without resorting to extreme measures.

M. Purishkevich, Monarchist member of the lower house of Parliament from Bessarabia and Vice President of the Union of True Russian People, was suspended at this morning's sitting of the lower house for insulting President Golovin. M. Purishkevich suddenly called on the members to rise as a mark of respect for the persons murdered by Revolutionists, and M. Golovin declared the proposal to he out of order. M. Purishkevich then shouted:

M. Golovin promptly moved M. Purishkevich's suspension during the sitting, and the motion was carried by a large majority. M. Purishkevich left the House threatening the President.

M. Golovin's firmness in defending the dignity of the Chsir is approved by all factions except a few reactionary fanatics.

The Constitutional Democrats to-morrow will propose a resolution referring the agrarian question to a committee in the hope of ending ths profitless debats. Last year the debate on this question continued the whole session.

The Constitutional Democrats will also move the appointment of a committee to report as quickly as possible a bill providing for the inviolahility of the person. They wish to pass this measure as the first constructive legislation of Parliament. Count Bobrinsky says the Monarchists are willing to accept such a bill.

The Opposition groups have decided to withdraw the hills for amnesty, the repeal of the temporary law, and compulsory universal education, which were slated to come up before the lower house to-morrow, because they are not prepared to defend them on the floor of the Duma.

It is reported that Emperor Nicholas and the Grand Dukes will donate $7,500,000 from their private purses toward the construction of a new fleet.

FINLAND TO BE BLOCKADED.

Finns Say There Is a Plot to Deprive Them of Their New Rights.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 11.—The Russian authorities are arranging for a strict blockade of Finland now that the season of navigation is approaching, in order to prevent the importation of arms hy Finnish or Russian Revolutionists.

Russia has instituted negotiations with Sweden and other powers for permission to use Aland Island, at ths entrance of ths Gulf of Bothnia, as a military and naval hase. Under the terms of a joint treaty Russia is forbiddsn to garrison the islands of this group. A fleet of torpedo boats and small cruisers will bs used to patrol the Baltic and some vessels will be sent to the White Sea. The increase of Russian troops in the strategic centres of Finland is also contemplated.

It is expected that the Finnish Diet will he dissolvsd if the Socialists attempt to pass radical legislation, and should ths members refuse to disperse, ths military occupation of ths Grand Duchy will hs come necessary.

The Finns assert that they are confronted hy a conspiracy to revoke the rights granted to them in 1906.

FREMONT'S MOTHER TO AID IN DEFENSE

Major Tells Court-Martial His Financial Troubles Came of Wife's Divorce Suit.

SURPRISE IN ARMY CIRCLES

Bankers Testify to Loans He Did Not Pay and of Their Confidence in Men of the Service.

In his defense, Major Francis P. Frémont, U. S. A., who is being court-martialed for his failure to pay back loans made from several banks in this State and for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, gave to Major Parker West of the General Staff a statement, which was introduced into evidence in the proceedings yesterday, in which he asserted that his financial embarrassments were the result of the cost of his wife's divorce suit and the alimony he was obliged to pay.

The statement caused surprise and comment in army circles. The evidence of yesterday, however, appeared to make the chances of the defendant brighter.

Mrs. John C. Frémont, widow of "the Pathfinder" and mother of the defendant, is coming to New York to testify in behalf of the Major. Mrs. Frémont, it is expected, will explain to the court, in the Army Building, the nature of her son's interest in certain California properties belonging to the Frémont family. Major Frémont, according to his accusers, made false representations as to certain realty holdings in San Francisco in order to obtain the loans that have got him into trouble through his failure to meet them at maturity.

The hearing yesterday was devoted to the examination of the officers of the Plattsburg (N. Y.) banks, from which institutions Major Frémont is alleged to have borrowed money on the strength of his declaration that he owned property in California and Cuba.

Prior to calling the Plattsburg bankers, Capt. Glasgow, the Judge Advocate in charge of the Government's case, called to the stand Major Parker West of the General Staff in Washington. Major West testified that as Assistant Inspector General of the army, he had been ordered by the War Department to visit Plattsburg and investigate the charges that had been filed against Major Frémont.

His investigations, he said, brought him in contact with Mr. Donnelly of Pittsburg, Major Frémont's partner in the Cuban tobacco venture, and the officials of the Plattsburg banks, the Royal Bank of Canada, and the National Bank of Cuba.

As a result of his investigation Major West said that he gave Major Fremont an opportunity to make a voluntary statement, which statement he submitted to the Judge Advocate. Capt. Glasgow thereupon read a statement to the court in which Major Fremont said that he had obtained the various sums referred to in the specifications from the banks, but that he had done so in good faith. He stated that he had not procured the loans by reason of his position in the United States Army.

Then he referred to his domestic troubles. Major Fremont declared that he had become financially entangled as a result of the divorce suit instituted against him by his wife, the payment of alimony to her, and that when the Plattsburg bank got after him he was forced into a corner. Had he been left free for the time Major Fremont believed that he would have been able to pay up the loans. As for the San Francisco property that plays such an important part in the present hearing, Major Fremont said that he had asserted that he had only a contingent interest in the property.

The first letter introduced was addressed to the Secretary of War and gave in detail the financial dealings of Major Frémont with the bank. After the letter was read, Mr. Loftus stated that it was the belief of the accused that another letter, not introduced in evidence, had been sent to Washington, in which it was stated that Major Frémont had made no stipulations as to the future payment of the money that was loaned him by the bank. Mr. Johnson denied having written any such letter.

Some more letters written by officers of Mr. Moffitt's bank were introduced here. They were similar in character to the ones written to the War Department by the First National Bank. Here Mr. Loftus asked the witness if Major Frémont had not stated that he was "interested in" and not "the owner of" the property in San Francisco that he referred to. Mr. Moffitt replied that, in his opinion, there was very little difference between "interested in" and "owning."

"Did you understand that this was the Frémont family property?" asked Mr. Loftus.

"I understood that it had been left to him by Gen. Frémont, his father," answered Mr. Moffitt.

Mr. Moffitt was then excused and an adjournment taken until 10:45 o'clock this morning.

BOXING MATCH RAIDED.

Police Came, as the Manager Knew They Would—Three Arrests.

Just as the members and visitors of the Long Acre Athletic Club, at 158 and 160 West Twenty-ninth Street, had settled down to enjoy a series of boxing bouts last night Detectives James, Murphy, and Graham of the Tenderloin Station, acting on Police Commissioner Bingham's orders, raided the club.

Michael J. Newman of 51 St. Mark's Place was charged with being the manager of the bout and William Cullen of 165 West Ninety-eighth Street and Frankie Howe of 158 West Twenty-ninth Street were charged with being the principals.

The place was crowded, and just before the first bout Mr. Newman stepped into the ring and said:

"I think the police are going to raid the club to-night."

"Naw, they ain't," shouted one disappointed man, and when the others chimed in Newman said he'd let the fights go on until the police came. Cullen and Howe stepped into the ring, and as they commenced to spar the detectives declared the boxers and Mr. Newman under arrest.

J. J. Buckley of 324 West Thirty-fifth Street bailed the prisoners out, furnishing $500 for each.

MAGONIGLE'S DESIGN FAULTY.

S. P. C. A. Members Think His Drinking Fountain Too Ornate.

There was some criticism yesterday of the design for public drinking fountains devised by H. Van Buren Magonigle, for which he received a prize and which was recently approved by the Municipal Art Commission. It was expressed at the monthly meeting of the Trustees of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Francis E. Ward of the Trustees' Committee on Fountains thought that the high column back of the trough and the trough's vertical sides might easily be battered by the poles of heavy trucks when they drove up to the drinking place. He thought that the column should be dispensed with entirely and that the trough should have sloping sides.

Twenty-nine persons were elected to membership in the society. These included Lorillard Spencer, Mrs. Lorillard Spencer, Jr., Henry B. Crosby, Mrs. Arthur Duane, Miss C. Helen King, and Miss Cora Barnes, who was made a life member.

ROBBED OF RINGS IN A HOTEL.

Woman Lost Jewelry Worth $2,300 from Hotel Albert.

Mrs. M. Adelia Craidwiles, a wealthy woman of Chicago, reported to the police at Headquarters last night that she had been robbed of three rings valued at $2,300 while stopping at the Hotel Albert, Eleventh Street and University Place. Mrs. Craidwiles said that on March 2 she packed the rings away in her trunk. She looked for them on March 21, and found that they had been stolen.

The police arrested Harry Bodgett, a negro, 29 years old, of 248 West Forty-first Street. He was taken to Police Headquarters as a suspicious person. Bodgett was employed as a bellboy at the hotel until two weeks ago. The police refused to say whether they had arrested the negro in connection with the robbery or not.

THREATENED GOV. STOKES.

W. J. Lee Again Under Arrest Here as Insane.

William J. Lee, 44 years old, a foreman ironworker, who is said to have designed the ironwork in the Williamsburg Bridge, was arrested at the Mount Morris Hotel, 130th Street and Third Avenue, where he lived, last night as an insane person. Lee has been sending threatening letters to Gov. Stokes of New Jersey and Judge Garret Dorset Wall Vroom of Trenton, N. J.

Lee recently sent a letter to a New York newspaper, in which he asked it to give him a fair account of things which he was about to do. The letter closed: "When I kill Gov. Stokes, all kinds of lies will be told about it."

He had been confined as an insane person.

DEATH A MERE HABIT.

Society of Eternal Youth Members Will Be Fined If They Are Sick.

Special to The New York Times.

DES MOINES, Iowa, April 11.—Articles of incorporation of the Society of Eternal Youth will be filed with the Polk County Recorder here to-morrow. Its officers, incorporators, and membership will subscribe to the doctrine that sickness and death are mere habits, which intelligent living might overcome.

Any member becoming sick and remaining so for three days will be subjected to a fine. The second offense of this character will mean suspension for six months, while a third lapse will mean permanent expulsion. E. L. Husted, a real estate broker, and two attorneys, George W. and C. Baker, originated the plan and are said to have interested a large number of Des Moines people in its exploitation.

NEW HOME FOR INCURABLES.

Mrs. Parker Will Build It in New Jersey as a Memorial.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., April 11.—Mrs. Henrietta M. Parker of 160 West Fifty-ninth Street, Manhattan, has filed a contract with the County Clerk here today for the erection of the Parker Home for Incurables, at Easton Avenue and Landing Road, this city, which she is to build in memory of her late husband, Francis Parker of New York, who had a magnificent Summer home here, and who was the son of Thomas Parker of this city. It will be one of the very few institutions of its kind in New Jersey. In addition to the regular staff that the home will have, Mrs. Parker has enlisted the services of the physicians of this city, who have agreed to give part of their time to the work of this hospital.

Plans for the building have been prepared by Cady & See of New York. The building will have a basement, two hospital wards, and thirty-one rooms, which will include sun parlors, offices, nurses' rooms, baths, living rooms, &c. The building will be of brick and marble, and will command a magnificent view of the Raritan and surrounding country. It is expected that it will be ready for use Nov. 1.

PAINTERS REFUSE TO WORK.

Remain Obdurate Despite the Ultimatum of the Arbitration Board.

The strike of the Brotherhood of Painters continued yesterday, in spite of the ultimatum of the General Arbitration Board that if by to-morrow the painters are not back on all arbitration contracts the painters will be suspended by the board, which will be equivalent to a lockout.

Some of the striking painters returned to work at the Plaza Hotel, where the George A. Fuller Company has the general contract, but they were ordered on strike again by the walking delegates and obeyed the strike order. The New York District Council of the Brotherhood of Painters reported that the strike had extended to a large number of the contracts in other cities of the members of the Master Painters' Association and the Interior Decorators and Cabinetmakers' Association, 1,000 painters being now on strike on these outside contracts.

The council also reported that a number of the independent firms in Manhattan and the Bronx had granted the new wage scale, and that their painters were at work. Abou 3,000 painters were on strike yesterday in the two boroughs.

NAPIER COMPANY BANKRUPT.

Automobile Concern Admits Liabilities of $140,000.

BOSTON, April 11.—On the petition of three Boston creditors, whose claims aggregate $1,300, Judge Dodge appointed today Arthur J. Farnsworth as receiver of the Napier Motor Company of America, manufacturers of automobiles. Mr. Farnsworth is Vice President of the concern. The creditors also filed a bankruptcy petition against the company. The Directors admitted the inability of the concern to pay its outstanding obligations, and expressed a willingness to have it adjudged bankrupt. The liabilities amount to $140,000. The assets have not been estimated.

Mr. Farnsworth said that in all probability the corporation would be reorganized.

THE ARAPAHOE UNDER TOW.

Disabled Clyde Liner Off Barnegat Early Last Night.

The Clyde liner Arapahoe, which lost her propeller while on her way from Jacksonville to this city with 200 passengers, is being towed slowly toward port. Theodore G. Eger, General Manager of the line, last night received a message from the disabled liner. She was off Barnegat at 8 o'clock under tow of two tugs, which were sent out to bring her in.

The crippled liner was disabled Tuesday night. She was first seen by the steamer Apache of the same line, and the latter towed her to a point off Winter Quarter Shoals, on the Virginia coast. The lines parted and the vessels were forced to anchor. In the meantime news of the accident was sent to this city by wireless and tugs were sent to bring the Arapahoe in. The tow boats had much difficulty in finding her.

The agents of the line expect that the Arapahoe will reach her pier early this morning. The wireless messages say that all are well on board of her and that there has not been the slightest danger. The sea was smooth last night.

PLAN TO PROBE ALL CITY DEPARTMENTS

Mayor May Ask Legislature to Name Investigating Committee.

HIS ANSWER TO THREATS

Ahearn's Friends Have Talked of Forcing Inquiry into Offices of the Mayor's Advisers.

An investigation of every department of the City Government by a legislative committee may be brought about within a few weeks if the plans of Mayor McClellan and Corporation Counsel Ellison don't miscarry. The latter has written to Albany to ascertain if it will be possible to have such an investigation committee appointed at this session.

The remarkable action of Mayor McClellan, who, of course, instigated Mr. Ellison's action, is due to the great possibility of the investigation into Borough President Ahearn's department—from which Mr. McClellan is exceedingly anxious to get results—falling to the ground through lack of power of the Commissioners of Accounts. It is also partly due to the fact that threats have been made, presumably by friends of Mr. Ahearn, that an investigation into Water Commissioner O'Brien's department and that of Francis J. Lantry, Fire Commissioner, in which O'Brien preceded Lantry, would be brought about, were the proceedings against the Borough President continued.

About the City Hall yesterday the idea of an investigation into every city department caused a gasp of dismay. That the Legislatnre would enjoy such a proceeding was taken for granted, but the effect on local politics was what was talked of most. In one quarter the report gained currency that the Mayor was going, may be, to escnew politics henceforth and give his attention to the changes in the various departments that might be rendered necessary in the interest of good government.

Mayor McClellan and Mr. Ellison had a long talk yesterday morning. In the afternoon the following letter, addreesed to Arthur C. Butts, the Assistant Corporation Counsel in charge of matters in Albany, was made public:

My Dear Mr. Butts: As you have probably observed, there has been considerable comment in connection with the pending investigation of the department of the President of the Borough of Manhattan as to whether the powers of the Commissioners of Accounts are sufficiently broad as to enable a searching and complete investigation to be made. Just what the Commissioners of Accounts are authorized and empowered to do is not without some doubt, and it may be that when the test comes their powers to enforce obedience to their subpoenas and compel the fullest introduction of testimony may be found to be insufficient. Certain it is that their authority in the premises is being vigorously questioned, and it is claimed that we will be barred by legal proceedings from making the full and fair investigation that I understand his Honor the Mayor desires to have made of the office of the Borough President and other departments of the City Government.

Before this difficulty could be solved by judicial decision—if the powers of the Commissioners of Accounts are, as I rather expect they will be, questioned—the Legislature will have adjourned. I therefore request that you ascertain, if possible, from the Governor and from the leaders of the Legislature whether, in their opinions, an investigating committee with full powers can be secured at this session, through whom a thorough investigation of all city departments may be had. I would much appreciate your obtaining this information before your return on Friday, if you can do so.

If I understand the Mayor correctly, it is his desire that all departments be carefully examined, but he has some doubts as to whether the powers of the Commissioners of Accounts are sufficient for the purpose. This has been a matter under consideration for some time, and it now becomes acute because of the alleged limitations to the powers of the Commissioners of Accounts by those who claim to speak for the department now under investigation.

WILLIAM B. ELLISON.

Neither Mr. Ellison nor the Mayor would discuss the matter at length. The Mayor said that the lettter spoke for itself, and added:

"There have been threats made that may be an investigation of other departments of the City Government might become necessary if the proceedings were continued against President Ahearn."

WILL SIGN BINGHAM BILL.

Mayor McClellan Says So, There Being No Opposition.

The Bingham Police bill, giving the Police Commissioner the power to reduce Inspectors to the rank of Captain and to form a new Detective Bureau, probably will become a law within a week. Mayor McClellan held yesterday the public hearing on the bill prescribed by law, and announced that he would sign it.

It was not expected that any one would appear at the hearing to oppose the bill, as the Police Inspectors, who are most interested, scarcely would hope to convince the Mayor that a bill drawn by his own Police Comissioner was not good legislation. Three men did appear, however, to favor the signing of the bill. To the first of these—Harry Robitzek of the Taxpayers' Alliance of the Bronx—the Mayor said:

"I would suggest that I know the provisions of the bill and the details of it, and therefore there is hardly any use in any one speaking for it. It is my intention to sign it unless there are good reasons for contrary action."

Mr. Robitzek did not think it worth while to continue his argument, and the other two men did not speak at all.

The Mayor probably will sign the bill to-day. It will be sent at once to the Legislature, and will then go to Gov. Hughes for his signature. As soon as he signs it it goes into effect.

W. H. Baker Quits Active Work.

After continuous and arduous work for nearly twenty years in the Postal Telegraph Company, William H. Baker has asked to be relieved from the detailed duties of Vice President and General Manager, and his resignation has been accepted. Mr. Baker, according to a statement sent out yesterday by President Clarence H. Mackay, will continue to act in an advisory capacity. Edward J. Nally will assume his duties with the title of Vice President and General Manager.

NATIONAL ACADEMY ELECTS 3 OUT OF 36

"Progressive" Painters Criticise the "Conservatives," Who Are in Control.

SAY THEY STAY IN A RUT

"Honest Stupidity," John Sloan Calls It—Mr. Henri Suggests Separate Exhibitions.

The art colony in this city is eagerly discussing the action of the National Academy of Design in rejecting at its election of members on Wednesday night thirty-three out of thirty-six nominees. The three elected were Joseph Pennell, the etcher, on first ballot, and Robert B. Brandegee and Frederick Ballard Williams, painters, on second ballot. The list of those who failed of election is as follows:

Painters—Hugh Breckinredge, George Elmer Browne, Charlotte B. Coman, Colin Campbell Cooper, Paul Cornoyer, Arthur B. Davies, Warren B. Davis, E. W. Deming, Ruger Donoho, George Wharton Edwards, E. Loyal Field, Robert David Gauley, Charles W. Hawthorne, William J. Hays, Paul King, Augustus Koopman, John Lambert, Ernest W. Lawson, De Witt M. Lockman, J. N. Marble, Willard Metcalf, Jerome Myers, J. Campbell Phillips, Edward F. Rook, Henry Reuterdahl, William Schevill, W. Granville Smith, Albert Sterner, Gustave Wiegand, and Cullen Yates.

Sculptors—John J. Boyle, Edith Woodman Burroughs, and Victor D. Brenner.

For some time there has been friction between what are generally referred to as the "progressive" and the "conservative" elements in the Academy. The trouble recently came to a head in the jury controversy over the current academy exhibition. Robert Henri, the leader of the "progressive" minority in that controversy, withdrew his pictures from the exhibition. For the last four years he has been on the exhibition jury, but at the election on Wednesday night his name was not included in the list of sixty jurymen elected for next year's two exhibitions.

Mr. Henri's Criticisms.

To a TIMES reporter Mr. Henri said last night:

"In its action of Wednesday night the National Academy of Design shows that it is going to stick to its old rut. There are some few men on the list of rejected nominees whom I would have voted against had I been present, but there are also men there who are among our best and strongest artists—men who should by all means be included in any association pretending to be representative of American art. These men are all progressives; they have broken away from the moribund conventions that are religiously followed by the conservatives and with brush and paint depict life as they see it.

"It is not a question of a lot of striving youngsters against a lot of arrived old men; it's a question of good art against bad. The painter who follows in the old rut is much more certain of popular acceptance than the man who strikes out on his own account and reproduces life as he sees it. If he keeps on long enough the world is likely to finally realize the merit of his work. And so many of the painters who are referred to as belonging to the young school are in reality old painters who have been working for years in obscurity. On the other hand, many of the men who have the 'old school' label on them are young painters who have adopted the old cut-and-dried, lifeless formulas.

"It is only the man who tries to paint things as he sees them that has any possibility in him of producing art. These are the men who are the vital painters.

"Of course I could sit quietly in the academy, but I feel that I ought to give the academy my strength, not my weakness. And so when I see a picture that has the huskiness of health in it, I feel it my duty to proclaim that fact irrespective of the name or age or school of its painter.

Other Exhibitions Suggested.

"It's hard to foretell just what will be the result of the Academy's wholesale rejection of painters. What the outsiders ought to do is to hold small or large group exhibitions so that the people may know what the artists who have something important to say are doing."

"Honest stupidity," is the way John Sloan labeled the attitude of the National Academy of Design toward the progressive painters. "I don't believe that jealousy or any kindred motive inspired the action of last Wednesday night. The Academicians simply don't see life the way we other painters see it and for that reason they cannot see any art in our pictures. The Academicians produce what you might call high-class American pot-boilers; they have a keen resentment for anything that is inspired by a new idea, and have an equally keen appreciation for everything that follows the old hide-bound conventions."

Reuterdahl's Comment.

Henry Reuterdahl, the illustrator, said: "The trouble with the Academicians is that they are afraid that if the younger men were admitted they would soon be the dominating spirit in the juries, with the result that many of the Academicians' pictures would go unhung.

"An Academy exhibition now looks like an exhibition of life-insurance calendars. The pictures are all painted on the academic formula. Unless a man paints accordingly there is no place for him to exhibit in New York.

"The Academy is doing everything for itself and its members and nothing for American art. If it is the guardian of American art, as it pretends to be, it ought to give the young man a chance."

WHAT THEY READ AT YALE.

English and American Fiction in the Lead—Junior Takes 238 Books.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, April 11.—A Yale senior, who is fond of collecting statistics, has been figuring for a year on the amount of reading done in the university. He has discovered that the greatest readers are the students in the Art School. Each averaged 14.8 books a year.

The members of the senior class of the academic department come next with 12.1 books each; the juniors next, with 11.8; the sophomores followed with 10.7, and the freshmen, with 7.7.

In the number of books withdrawn, English and American fiction lead, with 8,706; English and American literature second, with 5,473; other literature third, with 3,079; history and biography fourth, with 2,262.

RILEY GRANNAN'S WIFE HELD.

Sent to Bellevue at His Request for Examination as to Her Sanity.

Daisy Lee Grannan, wife of "Plunger" Riley Grannan, was arraigned in Jefferson Market Court yesterday, and after an examination by Magistrate Whitman was sent to the observation ward at Bellevue Hospital for examination as to her sanity.

"I am sane," declared Mrs. Grannan, when permitted to tell her story to the Magistrate. "I'm not proud of being the wife of Mr. Grannan. Why won't he let me go free?"

Mr. Grannan and Mrs. Mary B. Kent of 41 West Thirty-fifth Street, sister of Mrs. Grannan, asked that the woman be committed. Mrs. Kent told the Magistrate that her sister had escaped from a sanitarium in Hartford, Conn., where she had been under treatment three months.

SLUMMING CURATE QUITS.

Deposed from Ministry, with His Consent, by Bishop Greer.

The Rev. William Howard Mears, curate of St. Matthew's Church, who was arrested in a Seventh Avenue dive in company with a colored woman a few weeks ago, while pursuing, as he said, studies of sociological conditions in the Tenderloin, has been deposed from the ministry by Bishop-Coadjutor Greer.

Bishop Greer gave out this official statement of the result:

"The committee appointed to investigate the conduct of the Rev. W. Howard Mears on the night of March 12, 1907, have reported that his conduct on that occasion involved a violation of his sixth ordination vow, which requires that a clergyman, 'as far as in him lies, shall make himself a wholesome example and pattern to the flock of Christ.' Mr. Mears, while declaring that he was not actuated by any wrong motive, has accepted the finding and acknowledged the judgment of the committee, and declared in writing his renunciation of the ministry, and I have accordingly deposed him from the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church."

"Nothing else could have been done under the circumstances," added Bishop Greer.

The Rev. Arthur H. Judge, rector of St. Matthew's Church, declined to discuss the decision. Mrs. Mears said for her husband that they would not leave New York.

"Do you suppose we will run away just because the Church chooses to look upon my husband's actions in a false light?" said Mrs. Mears to a TIMES reporter. "We will certainly stay here. My husband will not be handicapped at all by leaving the ministry. He will now enter the lecture field. He is an able lecturer. In fact, that is the work for which he is best suited. He has already had quite a lot of experience on the lecture platform. His trips to the Tenderloin were to collect data for some of his lectures.

"I think my husband has a bright future before him. New York is the place for a man with brains, and my husband is such a man. Of course we will stay in New York. Mr. Mears will also write. He is able with the pen. We are not worrying."

While she was talking her husband was upstairs. Now and then he called "Alice," but she did not heed. Always, in the last few weeks, when reporters have called at the Mears house it was Mrs. Mears who has appeared for her husband. He was usually close by, but seldom showed himself. He may issue a formal statement to-day in the form of a letter which he has sent to Bishop Greer.

SAY W. T. STEAD ERRED.

Ministers Declare Christ's Church Is Militant Here.

Leading men in the great Protestant denominations, including the Methodists before whom he spoke on Monday last, are saying that William T. Stead of The London Review of Reviews was misinformed when he stated that he had been unable to find the Church of Christ in America, or anything which stood for it, and that its address did not appear in the telephone directory. Many leading New York pastors and laymen are members of the Executive Committee, which has been charged with the organization of a Federate Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and which now represents millions of Protestant communicants. The Rev. Dr. E. B. Sanford is Secretary of this committee. He was asked yesterday whether Mr. Stead was justified in his remarks before the New York Conference of the Methodist Church. Dr. Sanford said:

"Mr. Stead seems to be utterly ignorant of the great movement that in the last few years has been bringing the churches of Christ in this country into closo federated relations. The office of this National federation is in the heart of the city, and its telephone number is in the directory. If Mr. Stead will call us up or call at our office in the Bible House, it will give us pleasure to set him straight in the matter.

"In 1905 five hundred delegates, representing churches having a membership of over 17,000,000, met in conference in this city and unanimously adopted a plan under which there is now organizing a great Federal Council of the churches, made up of representatives officially appointed by the National assemblies of all the leading denominations. Through this Council the Church of Christ purposes to stand together and lead in the discussion of, and give an impulse to, all great movements that make for righteousness. International arbitration is one of the specific objects which has been named."

OLNEY MURDER ARREST.

Dan Davis, Who Discovered the Triple Murder, Also Held.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., April 11.—"Little" Dan Davis, the first person to discover the murders of Willis C. and Fred. R. Olney and little Alice Ingerick on October 6, 1905, was taken into custody by the police of this city this afternoon and lodged in the county jail at Goshen. It cannot be learned that any charge has been made against him, the authorities intimating that he is being held as a witness in the famous murder case.

Charles H. Rogers, who is indicted for the three murders, and who was arrested in Los Angeles on Tuesday night, has admitted his identity, and the District Attorney of Orange County is making out requisition papers with which two officers will be sent to Los Angeles in about a week.

At the time Rogers was indicted a person named "John Doe" was also indicted for murder on three counts as an accessory. The authorities have often stated that as soon as the suspected principal, Rogers, was arrested, "John Doe" would be named and taken into custody.

FRUITSTAND ON THE GRASS.

Corporations Petition to Dispossess an Italian from Bowling Green.

In the tiny circle of Bowling Green Park where the grass is due to sprout in a few weeks, Antonio Nardielo has built himself a large, bright green fruit stand close to the west entrance where the morning crowd of workers debouch from the Subway. Besides the dozen or so square yards of grassplot taken up by the stand, the keeper has pre-empted as much as he needs for the storage of empty fruit boxes.

The sight of this desecration of the little park right under the Government's new $5,000,000 Custom House has been getting on the nerves of the owners of some of the big buildings round about, and yesterday a petition was sent to Park Commissioner Herrman asking him to have the stand removed.

Besides the representatives of the surrounding property owners, the petition was signed by John D. Archbold of the Standard Oil Company, the Produce Exchange Bank, the Seaboard National Bank, Oelrichs & Co., the Produce Exchange, and about twenty other well-known firms and corporations.

ICEBERGS EARLY THIS YEAR.

Two Vessels in Yesterday Report the First of the Season.

The first icebergs to be seen along the North Atlantic steamship lane this Spring were reported by the Danish freight steamship Kentucky and the Anchor liner Furnessia, from Glasgow, which arrived yesterday. The appearance of bergs is reported somewhat earlier than usual and some steamship men are inclined to believe that they will soon be a menace to vessels on the northerly route.

On April 6 and 7 the Furnessia passed eighteen small icebergs, which were seen to the northward. The Kentucky, when off the Banks on April 4, sighted four bergs. Each was about 50 feet high and about 400 feet long.

GRAFT HUNT HERE NOT GREAT SUCCESS

Contractors Ignore Subpoenas to Tell of Pennsylvania Capitol Job.

COMMISSION GETS PROMISE

Manager of Woodbury Granite Company to Turn Over Records of Dealings with Sanderson.

The Pennsylvania's Legislative Investigating Commission again waited in vain yesterday for contractors to appear in the board room of the Audit Company of New York to tell what they know of the manipulations of contracts on the new Pennsylvania State Capitol, which cost the State $13,000,000, and which experts say should have been built for less than half the sum.

The contractors paid no attention to the subpoenas which had been served upon them by the Commission's Sergeant at Arms. They did not have to obey and they didn't. The commission got tired of waiting and departed for Harrisburg late in the afternoon, disappointed at its failure to get the testimony of so many of the men who furnished John H. Sanderson, the favored Capitol contractor, with material for which he is said to have charged the State several hundred per cent. more than he paid the men who really did the work.

The real work of the commission during the two days it was here was not in the executive sessions in the board room, but on the outside, where the Commissioners paved the way for a great deal of evidence which will be brought forward later, when the hearings are resumed in Harrisburg. What is considered one of the most important points developed yesterday after the commission had adjourned. H. E. Eastman, the New York manager for the Woodbury Granite Company of Hardwick, Vt., arrived just as the Commissioners were preparing to depart. He agreed to send the commission all data bearing on the company's relations with Sanderson, including estimates on granite, the date of the company's contract with Sanderson, and statements of all the sums of money that were paid to the company by the contractor.

The importance of this is evident in the light of what has already been brought out in the Capitol graft investigation. It has been shown that the political clique, which ran things to its liking during most of the years the State Capitol was under way, had apparently planned the expenditure of about $35,000,000 on the building, the original appropriation for which was only $4,000,000. One of the items of the supposed plan to roll up a gigantic bill for the State was granite approaches to the building, to cost in the neighborhood of $4,000,000. Estimates had been made, and all seemed in a fair way to be carried through when a change of politics placed a Democrat in the office of State Treasurer, and the clique's plans were balked.

A delegation from the commission visited the office of F. Mohr & Co., at 112 West Forty-second Street, yesterday, after realising that the company was going to pay no attention to the subpoena which had been served upon one of the firm. The delegation was well received, and the company promised to furnish the commission with a statement of all chairs and other furniture it sold Sanderson for the Capitol Building. These chairs, which were sold by the piece by Mohr & Co., were charged for by Sanderson by the foot, the air spaces being included in the estimate.

The Commissioners learned yesterday that John H. Sanderson, who had been living at Sherry's since October, when he severed all connection with Pennsylvania, left New York before the Commissioners arrived. They were also told that, although Sanderson received liberal prices for the State Capitol furnishings, owing to his unique "per pound" and "per foot" system of fixing values, he still owes large sums to the New York contractors to whom he sub-let the various jobs awarded him by the Capitol Building Commission. One of the firms which is said to have a large account against Sanderson is the Robert C. Fisher Company of 138th Street and Locust Avenue. They furnished the interior marble for the Capitol. E. B. Tompkins, President of the company, was subpoenaed, but did not appear. The Commissioners made efforts to see him yesterday, but he was always "out" when they called at the office. William K. Fertig, General Manager for the company, admitted yesterday to a TIMES reporter that his company's dealings with Sanderson had not been entirely satisfactory. He denied, however, that legal proceedings had been instituted by his company to compel Sanderson to pay up.

One of the contracting firms which refused to acknowledge a subpoena yesterday was the Blank & Boyd Manufacturing Company, bidders on the chandeliers for the Capitol. These chandeliers and bronze standards cost the State $2,000,000.

'CONSUL' IN THE MUSEUM NOW

Body of the Almost Human Chimpanzee Rescued from a Saloon.

Consul, the almost human chimpanzee, whose recent death in Berlin was mourned by the hundreds of children and grown-ups who had been amused by his antics, and whose stuffed and mounted body is now in the American Museum of Natural History, had a narrow escape from spending the remainder of his "stuffed" days adorning the bar of a Sixth Avenue saloon. Indeed, the monkey, once the proudest of his kind, did suffer this ignominy for a few days. He was rescued yesterday by Mr. Bostock's representative in this city.

In life Consul earned $1,500 a week, and his life was insured for $124,000. The museums of Berlin, London, and Paris all made bids for his body after his death, but Mr. Bostock decided to present him to the museum here. Upon reaching his Winter quarters in Richmond, Va., a few days ago, however, Mr. Bostock learned that Consul had not yet reached the museum, and he wired to this city to learn why.

His representative learned that after Consul's body had been sold by the Customs officials because no duty had been paid it was placed behind the bar of a saloon, whose proprietor had bid him in for $35. This man at last agreed to deliver Consul to Mr. Bostock for a bonus of $25. The money was quickly paid, and yesterday Consul was turned over to the museum.

CHANGES AT YALE.

President's Veto Now May Be Reversed by the Corporation.

NEW HAVEN, April 11.—A committee of five of the Yale Corporation, including President Hadley, which has been at work for a long time on the rules for university government, recently brought in a report which the corporation has accepted.

The old veto power of the President in the Faculty can be reversed by the corporation. There is a much larger definition as well as expansion of the powers of the Prudential Committee, and a new and businesslike order of procedure is adopted. There is also very careful definition of the relative powers and functions of the Faculties and corporation in such matters as appointments and important affairs of instruction and government.

The Yale field is put under control of a Treasurer appointed by the corporation, who is also to act as graduate adviser in athletics. The Deans are made executive officers of their departments.

"DR." LUND FINED $100.

Autopsy Showed His Drugs Did Not Cause Slocum's Death.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., April 11.—O. C. Lund of New York was to-day found guilty in the Greenwich Borough Court by Judge Tierney of illegally administering drugs and nostrums to Frederick Slocum previous to his death Saturday night. He received the minimum penalty, $100 fine and costs, and his attorney, W. S. Wright, took an appeal for him.

Lund says he applied electrical treatment and then later took some drugs to Slocum, believing the man had pneumonia. The Coroner's autopsy showed that Slocum had four other complaints, but no pneumonia, and that the drugs did not cause death. This relieved Lund of the charge about to have been brought for manslaughter.

HANAN UP IN POOLROOM CASE.

Shoe Man Says He Never Placed a Poolroom Bet In His Life.

Thomas R. Keator, who was arrested in the poolroom headquarters in lower Broadway when the place was raided by the police and the District Attorney's men two weeks ago, was held yesterday by Magistrate Barlow in the Tombs Court in $2,500 bail for the Grand Jury. He is charged with maintaining a poolroom.

The poolroom investigation which Assistant District Attorney Vandiver has been conducting was continued yesterday. More than half a dozen witnesses were examined before Magistrate Barlow on John Doe proceedings.

Mr. Vandiver's office was also crowded yesterday afternoon with men who had been summoned to tell what they knew of poolroom operations in this city. Among those questioned was John H. Hanan, the shoe man. Mr. Hanan said that he had never in his life placed a bet in a poolroom.

ANGLO-AMERICAN FINANCE.

The reduction of the Bank of England rate must be regarded as a tribute—for what it is worth—to the sanity and safety of the American situation. Obviously it was no time for the reduction of the rate while our affairs were so desperate that at any time we might be demanding more gold than London could spare. We have remarked before that there was an apparent inconsistency between our being both deeply in debt abroad and also in position to draw gold from abroad. Inconvenience is no excuse in commercial affairs, and if we were embarrassed in our domestic affairs that could be no reason for refusing to remit gold upon our creditors' demand. And yet our alleged creditors were in fear of our demands for gold. However, this inconsistency is none of our affair, for we have never adopted it. With the reduction of the Bank of England rate the notion may be dismissed even by those who still take their views of American affairs from other sources than those available here.

To us it seems more remarkable that the Bank of England rate is maintained at 4½ per cent. than that it should be reduced to that figure. It not only now is unusually high—it follows an unexampled period of dear money. Ninety days at 6 per cent. was followed by eighty-four days at 5 per cent., and still a normal level of the money is not reached. Here is a phenomenon that is not referable to the excesses of American market riggers. The reduction to 5 per cent. blocked any suggestion that the farsighted Englishmen saw the end from the beginning. If so, either they never would have had a 6 per cent. rate or they would have maintained it longer. As it seems to us the facts suggest that London has been equally mistaken about its affairs and New York's, and that its troubles are not yet over. Our judgment is that both England and the United States—and for that matter the world—is suffering from that absorption of liquid capital which is characteristic of great prosperity.

Those who take this view think that there can be no fundamental relief except from the increase of capital available, and that more or less stress at one time or another in the banking situation is not so good a barometer as the condition of trade. Every prosperous country in the world is put to its choice whether it prefers active trade or cheaper money, for under present conditions both are not attainable. Our condition is better than other countries', because our money market has been artificially straitened, and is now in position to be artificially assisted. That is to say our money market stringency is in part due to our currency and Treasury system. Out of the banks we possess a billion dollars which ought to be in them, and in the Treasury is visible a practical addition to the bank surplus adequate to any demand in sight. Moreover our merchandise balance gives us a call upon all the foreign gold we need. These are the reasons we have not shared England's anxiety about us.

It is in England's prosperity that we find facts not indicative of such ease in England's monetary affairs as some may infer from its falling bank rate. Only a few days ago that its Board of Trade reported increases of £4,477,000 imports and £3,071,900 exports. Of the imports the United States contributed £2,500,000 in cotton, which was payable to us in gold at our option. It is to the excess of the growth in imports over exports that we would draw attention. England's excess of imports for March of the last three years was as follows: 1907, £23,024,625; 1906, £21,619,425; 1905, £20,912,489. England's debits abroad are therefore increasing, while its credits are declining. EDGAR SPEYER has reckoned the national loss of income due to extravagance in national finances at £24,000,000 annually. To this must be added the interest absorbed in the growth of the municipal debt from £92,820,100 in 1875 to £393,882,146. And this does not include large floating debts incurred by capital expenditures under both heads, nor private extravagance upon a comparable scale. Before this later era of English extravagance this capital would have been exported, and would have laid foreign countries under tribute. But, as we have seen, England has been running up debts abroad, and has not been shipping either the goods or the capital to balance the account.

This is the reverse of our own condition, and explains why our money market relieves itself so much more easily than London's, whose banking half year is certainly a phenomenon, and perhaps a portent. If the facts were similar regarding ourselves we should expect to hear British reproaches against American fondness for living upon what may be called the installment plan, like young couples who get credit for the furniture which they cannot afford. It has hitherto been characteristic rather of Americans to ride in mortgaged automobiles on borrowed gasoline and to defy the day of reckoning, as a Chicago humorist remarked on Appomattox day. Either England has been indulging itself in similar conduct, or else its banking conditions are worse than appear, and they appear worse than they have for a generation. It is our candor regarding the beam in our own eye which warrants our remarking the beam in the eye of our genial critics. Things English as well as things American look differently on opposite sides of the ocean.

"POOR MAN'S COURTS."

The statement recently put forth that Mr. HERBERT PARSONS, President of the New York Republican County Committee, opposes the passage of the "Poor Man's Court" bill recommended by Gov. HUGHES seems not well founded. By increasing the number of Judges and strengthening the Municipal Court system it seeks to prevent scandalous delays, which, as Gov. HUGHES says, "amount to a denial of justice and breed disrespect for the law and its administration." The Assembly Committee yesterday reported the bill favorably, and Mr. PARSONS is thus far vindicated.

The Municipal Court Justices are shamefully overworked. Although many of them hold sessions until midnight, at least 15,000 cases which concern the affairs of poor litigants remain buried in the calendars, and the courts are still running behind. Hundreds of cases are being withdrawn in despair after continual adjournments.

The Wells bill increases the Justices for Manhattan from fourteen to twenty-two, affords Brooklyn four new Judges, raises their salaries from $6,000 to $8,000, assures them a full term, assigns several Justices to a heavily incumbered district, and provides for the election of a substitute when a Justice becomes permanently disabled. The new Justices are to be elected next Fall. The bill was drafted by Mr. JULIUS H. COHEN on behalf of the Citizens' Union, and has received the approval of the press, of representative men, and associations concerned in the public welfare. It is directly to the interest of all citizens that it be passed with convenient dispatch.

OUR TOP-HEAVY SCHOOL SYSTEM.

Mr. FRANK H. PARTRIDGE, a member for some years of the Board of Education, has been talking a good deal of common sense to a reporter of The Evening Post. The immediate occasion of the talk is the proposition of Mayor MCCLELLAN for the consolidation of the Normal College and the Training School for Teachers. Duplication of expenditure and effort is obviously enough a mistake, and there is little doubt that it exists in this instance. In connection with the consolidation Mr. PARTRIDGE suggests that applicants for admission should be subjected to a strict examination as to general fitness in order to avoid waste and loss to them and to the city in case they are found incapable after two or three years.

A like evil, but on a larger scale and with more serious results, Mr. PARTRIDGE believes exists in the duplication of the work of the City College and the Boys' High Schools. He thinks that the first four years of the boys who now go to the City College could be profitably passed in the High Schools and "the last three year boys could be taken care of by Columbia and New York Universities and St. Francis Xavier." He says:

> The City of New York is under no obligation to give higher education free to every boy who applies, any more than she is under obligation to teach them the professions free. When the city provides elementary and high schools requiring twelve years of school apprenticeship, and permits those who elect to continue two years more free at the Training School for Teachers; and when you consider the small percentage who go beyond this, the city has done handsomely, and all that can reasonably be expected, especially when one considers that a high school education is to-day equivalent to a university education of twenty-five years ago.

Mr. PARTRIDGE also argues that most of the parents of the boys who attend the City College could afford to pay for their tuition in the universities of the city, while for boys who cannot afford this there are numerous scholarships offered by these institutions and by Cornell.

Mr. PARTRIDGE uses a slightly loose, but very telling, expression when he says that "the city is doing much to pauperize education." The city certainly is doing much to prevent both the parents and the youths of New York from regarding education as a precious and necessary thing for which sacrifices are at once justified and rewarded. And this is especially true of what is known as "higher" education, which as a matter of fact is higher only because it costs the city far more in proportion to its value or the need of it. We do not regard the total of $40,000,000 a year as extravagant, were it expended in a way to secure the best results. But we do regard it as grossly misappropriated in the light of the actual condition of instruction in this city. When that enormous sum, equivalent to $50 a voter each year, is so distributed that a very large number of young children are left with imperfect use of the schools we have, and a much greater number are receiving inferior instruction, while heavy expenses are incurred for the "higher" education of a relatively insignificant number, then it cannot be denied that there is serious waste in our system. And when we reflect that the class which is thus deprived of advantage to which it is clearly entitled is the class that needs the schooling most, is least able to pay for it, and pays more of the school tax in proportion to its means than any other, then it ought to be plain that there is not only gross waste, but still grosser injustice in our system. Indubitably we ought to have a revision of the system with a view to abolish duplication. But that is only a beginning of remedy for evils of long standing. The money spent at the top should be taken to strengthen the foundation. That is the truest and the most effective economy, and it is also the fairest and most sensible policy.

THE BASEBALL SEASON.

The professional baseball season really opened yesterday. Professional baseball cannot be considered as a sport, except as to the spectators. As to the players and the managers it is to be regarded strictly as a business. To be sure, the object of the persons interested in the business is to draw the largest possible number of the spectators to whom the business is a sport. The practical problem is how these are to be secured.

With the free interchange of players among the different organizations, locality no longer counts as to the "nines." The local manager may be quite sure that if he can assemble a winning organization of players, none or few of the spectators will pause to consider their origin. Local patriotism, as manifested in baseball, is a strange, irrational passion. The crowd of local patriots have no hesitation in violently applauding this season as a native the same player whom they last year violently hissed as an alien enemy. In England, where "county cricket" takes nearly the same place in public interest that in this country is taken by the National League and the American League in baseball, they take local patriotism more seriously than do our "rooters." There are regulations intended to prevent the appearance of a cricketer for a county on no better principle than that the county "hath hired him."

To that extent the problem of our baseball managers is simplified. And the essential problem is obvious. The teams must be as nearly as possible equalized in strength. To this requirement there is a supplemental condition, and that is that the cities which supply the largest and most lucrative "gate" shall be assured, so far as can be assured beforehand, of local teams strong enough to elicit the largest amount of profitable local enthusiasm. This condition would apparently require that the teams should be strong in the order of the cities in population. And we find this condition to have been very fairly fulfilled. Last year Chicago finished first and New York second in both leagues. The year before New York finished first in one league and Philadelphia in the other, and the appeals to the local patriotism of the first and third cities of the country, cities only two hours apart, were of course more effective than the appeal that could be made to Chicago in favor of its own two victorious teams of 1906. But the later outcome was at least proof, which cannot be called superfluous proof, considering the temptations of business baseball, that the result had not been prearranged, that the games had not been "thrown."

No doubt the action of business motives, which are, we hasten to say, entirely legitimate business motives, will be observable in the season of 1907. Not only should each league, subject to the deductions noted, endeavor to equalize the strength of its teams. But there is nothing immoral in the suggestion that the managers of the two great leagues should "get together," subject to the conditions imposed by honesty and fair dealing, and that the final contest, at the end of the season, should be between the two teams which have proved themselves to be the most skillful and effective baseball teams in the United States.

NATURAL CONSEQUENCES.

Smashing the railways as a means of prolonging prosperity is producing results outside of Wall Street as well as within it. Everybody of course rejoiced at the reduction of the swollen fortunes, and it has been a favorite diversion to jeer at the railways' warnings at the consequence. Was their motive not too clear to merit attention? Would they not continue their work of development for the most selfish of reasons, and if they balked could not a law be passed to meet the case? But how will a law be passed to meet what is reported from Chicago?

A year ago railway labor was in such demand that agencies could not meet the demand, and wages went up to $1.50 and $2.25 a day. Now:

> Italian, Greek, Austrian, and Belgian laborers are far in excess of the demand for them. They are thronging the labor agencies in Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, and other cities and gladly paying $3 each to the labor agents for finding work for them. The wages now offered for ordinary earth and ballast handlers range from $1.25 to $1.50, or from 25 to 50 cents less than was paid last year. Track layers, or "steel gangs," get from $1.40 to $1.60 a day, or about 50 cents less than last year.
> All the comfort we can offer is that if the railways do not employ this coarse labor there will be so much less competition for the farmers, and the harvest may be less troublesome than last year. This naturally will make the farmers even more stony-hearted than ever toward their natural foes—the carriers of their crops. As yet the good work is only begun. Neither Mr. BRYAN nor Mr. ROOSEVELT can complete it alone, and the latest suggestion is that they shall run, and perhaps work, in double harness as a single team. We wonder how either of them likes the idea, and which is the more surprised at it?

THE CARNEGIE INSTITUTE.

Suppose Mr. CARNEGIE had done nothing else than to found the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburg. His name would be entitled to be put high up on the roll of public benefactors. It is very nearly if not quite the first of those benefactions by which he attempted to differentiate himself from the common millionaire, from the man, as he himself put it in his speech yesterday, "who knows no better than to deaden his soul by mere possession, counting over the hoard which holds him down, or using his faculties in old age in augmenting the useless stuff which ministers not to any need worthy of man."

Many local benefactors there have been in many lands, who have in one way or another returned their thanks to the place of their birth or the place in which their fortunes were accumulated. But hardly one is entitled to recognition for so various a local benefaction as the Carnegie Institute of Pittsburg. It includes, as its founder again said in his speech, "a combination of library and art gallery, museum and hall of music, never, so far as I know, attempted before." And it includes, in great part also, if we are rightly informed, the orchestra which makes the "hall of music" a continual benefaction. It includes besides the technical schools which are doing so enormously useful a work, and whose fifteen hundred students were present yesterday impressively to attest their usefulness. Quite apart in its special purpose from the munificent endowment of research which the same founder has created in the Carnegie Institution of Washington, but forming a civic and educational centre such as not another American city but Pittsburg can boast, it is no wonder that it should be, as it seems to be, the favorite child of its fortunate father, who can already see and rejoice in the beneficence of his work and its fitness to the ends for which it was designed. The President, in his letter, expressed in one of his occasional felicities the essence of the benefaction: "Every such foundation designed to serve the educational uplifting of our people represents just so much gain for American life, just so much credit for us collectively as a Nation."

And that is not all, nor the best. Mr. CARNEGIE has before now publicly declared that his mission was not to give so much as to make other men give. How completely he has fulfilled that mission in this case! He has summoned from the civilized nations of the earth a cloud of witnesses to this rededication. Among them are the representatives of countries in which such benefactions as this institution on such a scale would never be dreamed except as the result of Governmental action. And they see and will testify that such benefactions may accrue from the very utmost freedom of individualism, from the acknowledgment, on the part of a very fortunate man, of his obligation to the community to which he owes his fortune. Already Mr. CARNEGIE has put an effective constraint upon American millionaires to divide their millions with the public. It is not fantastic to expect that his example, attested as its results will be by all these European witnesses, will put a like pressure upon the conspicuously rich men of countries in which such private munificence toward public objects is so unfamiliar that it is safe to call it unknown.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

New Kind of Amateur Theatricals.

In the April number of Charities—an interesting and valuable magazine, by the way, which might get as many readers as it deserves if it had a name the very sound of which was not offensive to a large and rapidly increasing number of people—there is an article on the Children's Theatre, a sociological experiment on the east side which has developed into a great success in every way except as a money-maker. As the Educational Alliance stands behind it, however, ready to make up the annual deficit, all except the most rigid of economists will regard that as a matter of small importance.

This theatre, which has been running for several years to constantly crowded houses without attracting the attention of the theatrical critics, depends for the production of its plays, some of which are selected and some original, entirely upon the histrionic talents of young men and women living in the neighborhood, who do the acting for no other remuneration than the applause of the children in the same district. It is a little disquieting, in some ways, to note that "dramatic and artistic development is always subordinated to the training of character and the inculcation of moral ideas" in the Children's Theatre, for that implies the charge that there is a necessary or at least possible antagonism between the one and the other, besides being dreadfully platitudinous and wearisome, but people often say such things as that merely from an obsession of high-sounding words, and this Children's Theatre seems to have made no mistakes in the way of confounding the tiresome or the barbaric with the virtuous.

The plays are evidently well chosen, with no indication of a tendency toward preachiness, and the popularity of the performances speaks volumes for standards of appreciation on the east side. "After the parts have been assigned," we read, "some months of careful training. This training means much for the young men and women, who learn through it English speech and physical control, and who have been transformed from awkwardness to grace, from gaucherie to fine bearing. Every play has several odsis, so that as many as possible may take advantage of the opportunities afforded, and responsibilities of frequent performance weigh unduly on no one."

This little theatre has attracted not a few visitors eminent in sociological circles, and they all seem to have been impressed by its value as an educational medium, both for the actors and for the spectators. The admission price, which used to be 5 cents, has now been raised to 10, with no diminution in attendance, but the expenses are still three times the receipts, and the cry is for an endowment. Well, Mr. CARNEGIE is particularly "easy" just now, and he might put his money to worse uses.

Mr. Berkman Has Retired.

ALEXANDER BERKMAN, who was recently characterized by a not too loving brother in anarchy as a man "who thinks that vast progress toward the acme of human achievement is made when a knife is stuck into a millionaire," makes a truly curious announcement in Mother Earth, the fierce little monthly which EMMA GOLDMAN, with his help, or he with hers, has been conducting. The proclamation is addressed "To My Friends" and begins with the simple statement: "I have quit my business." Then, declaring that perhaps he owes his friends an explanation, and surely he owes one to himself, the sometime assailant of Mr. FRICK says:

> "My original plan did not include exploitation. I intended to do all the necessary work myself, wishing to be neither exploiter nor exploited. The intense competition in the printing trade, however, plus union conditions, which do not permit the compositor to perform pressman's work, soon convinced me that my plan was not feasible. The employment of a pressman at union wages necessitated the enlargement of the business, involving the usual business methods, &c. In short, I stood before the alternative of sacrificing either my principles or my business. I quit the business. I feel as if I were released from prison again."

We do not quite catch from this whether Mother Earth is to cease publication or whether Mr. BERKMAN has merely abandoned his job as foreman of the press-room, but evidently he has been having an encounter with "union rules," and as evidently he thinks that there is something wrong about them. This does not prove that Mr. BERKMAN is inconsistent, for, of course, an out-and-out Anarchist hates rules of any kind, as being little better than laws and Governments, but the episode does prove that anarchy has more than capital to fight. It must also beat, or be beaten by, "labor" in its modern, organized form, and Mr. BERKMAN seems to have been beaten. But what is he going to do? Presumably he thinks that he must live.

Osteopathy Takes a Step.

To have forced or persuaded the Assembly to pass a compromise medical examination bill is a large triumph for the osteopathists and doubtless they will exult over it. The bill is not a law yet, however, and it still has before it a danger sometimes spoken of as "the gentleman down stairs."

And after all the bill is not so bad. Whether the present brood of osteopaths are "recognized" or not, apparently they will go on practicing their curious art, and the doctors cannot complain too much if they are recognized, because only a few years ago, when they had passed an examination law that suited them, they, too, took good care of the brothers who couldn't, or, at least, didn't want to, go before the examiners. And the new bill does provide a single examining board, which is to subject all aspirants for the degree of M. D. to practically the same tests. That rule, if enforced with reasonable severity, will be a vast advance on the present situation, which is as absurd as absurd could be, and any osteopath who gets in under it will be welcome as well as competent to specialize in bone manipulation as much as he pleases.

LIKES SPECIAL FEATURES.

Mr. Gotshall Praises Recent Financial and Political News Articles.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On behalf of myself and some of my associates, who are intersted in financial matters, I congratulate you on the excellence of the financial feature of the Monday edition of THE NEW YORK TIMES. This feature of your paper is not only an excellent idea, but the manner in which the idea is executed is admirable.

I also beg to assure you that not only myself but others have noticed and appreciated the enterprising manner in which THE NEW YORK TIMES has obtained many exclusive and original articles relating to the present agitation. In these articles are very frequently and exclusively set forth the ideas of the National and State Administrations on the important questions now before the public, relating to railroads and other corporations.

W. C. GOTSHALL.

To Harlem by Boat.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"C.'s" suggestion in to-day's TIMES as to small boats plying up and down the East and North Rivers is capital. Thirty years ago there was a line between Harlem and Wall Street, which ran all the year, and was crowded morning and evening. The boats were, however, too big, and only ran every hour.

If a line could be established sending boats completely round the island, going each way, many excursionists as well as daily toilers would be carried. Small propellers, running every fifteen or thirty minutes, would carry immense numbers of both sorts.

Missing White Wings.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On Wednesday morning after the hard snowstorm of Tuesday, when the gutters and sewer openings were clogged with snow and the crosswalks overflowed with water, I walked down Amsterdam Avenue, from 106th Street to Ninety-third Street, and was able to discover but one "White Wing" on either the avenue or the side streets the entire distance, though it was 9 o'clock in the morning. The one I did see was loafing along the sidewalk on the avenue.

Misinformation as to Teachers' Bill.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The statement quoted on Page 16 of to-day's TIMES that two-thirds of 93 per cent. of the four mills tax shall be devoted to salaries of teachers of the first six years of the course is false. Will you kindly contradict the same in to-morrow's issue?

As to the truth of my statement I refer you to the amended Senate Bill No. 883.

April Snow in 1894.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

You are away off in the statement that the snowfall yesterday, 3½ inches, made the record since 1871. You entirely overlook the great snowfall of April 11, 1894, at which time the snowfall here in Yonkers was 15 inches, and from 12 to 20 inches all over the State, 24 inches in Philadelphia, and from 15 to 30 inches all over Pennsylvania.

FOR PEACE IN RUSSIA.

Mr. Aladin Shows That the Reformers Are Doing Their Share.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your editorial of April 11 you kindly mention my name and put the question, "Why any 'war' at all in Russia?" "Why should there not be instead of war an attempt to modernize Russia peacefully and gradually? Mr. Stolypin on his side has done his utmost."

It seems to me that from the wire of Mr. Stephen Bonsal I can infer that the other side has also done its utmost indeed to stop the war. I quote Mr. Stephen Bonsal.

"The campaign of assassination by the revolutionists, with the exception of several insignificant murders of police by irresponsible students, has also ceased, at least temporarily."

So much for the revolutionary parties. As to the amount of political wisdom in the second Duma, it seems to me that we have to admit that the second Duma has shown already its conciliatory spirit to a very marked degree. Neither the burning question of amnesty, nor the intensely moving question of the famine relief fund, has changed this. Not even the all-important question of the annual budget has been treated by the Duma in a spirit of irreconcilable opposition. The Duma met the Government at least half way, so that, to my understanding, the other side, I mean the Duma, has done all that was humanly possible to eliminate any possibility of continuation of internal warfare.

In all fairness to the Duma, I think you should find it possible to print this letter.

ROOSEVELT IN 1908.

More Comment on the Result of The Times's Canvas.

From The Milwaukee Sentinel.

Two New York papers, THE TIMES and The Herald, have been making a canvass of the country as to the general question of President Roosevelt's popularity. To the general question addressed to a large number of authorities presumably most in touch with public sentiment in their respective communities whether Mr. Roosevelt is as popular as ever an unbroken chorus of "ayes," unhesitating, unqualified, and enthusiastic, has been returned.

That is the hard fact confronting those who, the wish perhaps fathering the thought, have from time to time broached the theory of Mr. Roosevelt's waning popularity. On the overwhelmingly affirmative and presumably unwelcome reply to its canvass the frank comment of the Democratic and conservative TIMES is interesting:

> "No American statesman ever had such an unquestioning support, a support so completely uncritical, or one so manifestly due to the inspiration awakened by personality. It is an astonishing spectacle."

From The Detroit News.

THE NEW YORK TIMES recently addressed to 500 Republican editors throughout the country a request for their opinion as to whether President Roosevelt is now as popular with the voters as he was at the time of his election. In replying, the editor of The Marquette Mining Journal, located in the heart of the Steel Trust's western preserve, writes as follows:

> "This is a mining region, heretofore dominated in politics by the corporations. Local elections are beginning to show the latter that they must begin to keep hands off. I think Roosevelt has helped bring about this result. I should say the President is fully as strong among the masses of the voters as he ever was—perhaps a little stronger."

It is a genuine inspiration to find such a breeze blowing from the Lake Superior country. It is comforting and grateful to discover that conditions there have so changed as to make it possible for an editor above the Straits to speak his mind so freely, even in a communication to a far away publication. Time was, and until recently, when the public journals of the mining country were about as thoroughly dominated by special interests as were the caucuses and conventions which sent dependable corporation agents to Lansing with ease and regularity. Prior to the awakening of the public conscience for which Theodore Roosevelt is supremely responsible, it would hardly have been possible to find so courageous a publicist between the Soo and Ironwood as speaks in the quoted letter.

From The Topeka Capital.

Sunday's NEW YORK TIMES, not much of a supporter of Roosevelt, publishes replies to a letter to 500 Republican editors over the country inquiring whether the President has lost or gained in popularity. It will surprise nobody, THE TIMES comments, to learn that Mr. Roosevelt is more popular than ever, but what astonishes THE TIMES is that there is no minority sentiment. "The unanimity of the replies to this effect," says THE TIMES, "and the length to which the editors, as men most closely in touch with the sentiment of the country, go in asserting the overpowering strength, the deep seriousness and the blazing enthusiasm with which the mass of the Republican Party and a large proportion of Democrats have now come to the support of the President, is an astonishing revelation."

Politics is the most occult modern science. It is now said that the enemies of Roosevelt—and THE NEW YORK TIMES is certainly not friendly to him—have entered into a flagitious plot to stir up and organize the Roosevelt third term sentiment so as to defeat the President's present purposes. Friends of the President have been warned by special dispatches from Washington to look out for this new roorback. The hand of the conspirators has been disclosed, their design being to get delegates chosen ostensibly for Roosevelt's renomination, to be turned to some anti-Roosevelt candidate at the proper time.

Friends of the President are cautioned from Washington against this plot and advised that it is nothing else than a strategem to beat Taft. It would be a strange twist in politics if the Roosevelt following were for Taft and the anti-Roosevelt scheming to get instructions for the President's renomination. But politics is a mysterious science and queer complications often arise in it that puzzle the understanding of the plain "sovereign squat."

From The Boston Globe.

THE NEW YORK TIMES is publishing replies to 500 letters addressed last week to Republican editors throughout the country asking whether President Roosevelt is now as popular as he was at the time of his election. The answers thus far are overwhelmingly to the effect that President Roosevelt's popularity, not only has not diminished, but on the whole has increased.

From The Boston Herald.

The inquiry made throughout the country by two New York newspapers as to the present popularity of the President only disclosed what every careful observer already knew—that the mass of his own party and a very considerable number of Democrats are still "with Roosevelt."

The Crowding at Ninth St. Station.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is amazing that the disgraceful and indecent condition which exists at the Ninth Street Station of the Third Avenue elevated road by reason of the utterly inadequate stairway facilities has not been the subject of press comment during these many years past. The traffic at this station at the morning and night hours is composed very largely of working girls, and the indignities to which they have been subjected for years have been known. In view of this fact it is the more remarkable that the management of the Bible House should refuse to allow a stairway upon the sidewalk at their corner, which would afford the requisite relief.

If the American Bible Society will not comply with such a reasonable demand on the part of the public then the Interborough could at least provide a footbridge across the tracks with escalator service thereto, the same as is done at Thirty-third Street and Sixth Avenue, locating the escalator upon the south side of the street, where, presumably, it would have to deal with a more reasonable owner on the abutting property.

RARE AUTOGRAPHS SOLD.

Full Set of Letters from the Presidents Brings $245 at Auction.

A complete set of autographs of the Presidents of the United States, from Washington to Roosevelt, was a feature of the $10,800 sale of rare books and autographs at the Merwin-Clayton rooms, in East Twentieth Street, yesterday. It sold for $245. The John Adams was an autograph document, signed 1767. The Andrew Johnson was a Consul's commission, 1866. The William McKinley was a letter not written, but signed, addressed to Private Dalzell, and dated 1895. All the others were full autograph letters, signed. The Roosevelt's was a 16mo, 1884, about "a joint session" he and Senator Gibbs were to hold.

There was another letter of George Washington in the sale, dated 1754, and describing the difficulties of the navigation of the Potomac River, which he himself had made. There is a postscript, written some time later by Washington, which says "Gen. Braddock's late coming in the Spring of 1755, and hurry of business immediately upon his arrival, allowed no time for attempts, and afterwards our affairs, as everybody knows, took quite another turn." This letter brought $93. It was not in good condition.

Other high prices were as follows:

An autograph document signed by Raphael, dated Roma, May, 1516, $160.

Life of Sportsman, by C. J. Apperly, and illustrated by Henry Alken, $111.

"England's Helicon," by John Bodenham, first edition, London, 1600, $175.

EXPOSE THE GRAFTERS.

Pennsylvania's Scandal Taken as a Text for Reforms in Other States.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is a crying shame that the people in general are so indifferent to the corruption existing in the different States. For instance, the facts brought out at the investigation by the legislative committee at Harrisburg, Penn., show that a contracting firm of Philadelphia, Sanderson & Co., charged the State $1,619 for a bootblack stand which cost $125, and that for desks which cost $65 they charged $264.60, and for desks which cost $75 they charged $285.73.

No doubt there was a "rake-off" with some of the State officials, and no doubt the same thing is going on in this city and all over the country. Citizens who are aware of such swindles ought to at once notify the proper authorities, so that the culprits can be punished before it is too late.

We ought to have more moral teachers like Dr. Felix Adler to awaken the moral conscience now lying dormant in the breasts of a good many of our traders. Men ought to be respected for their moral worth and not for money alone.

Women First in Shorthand Tests.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Apropos of the editorial in THE NEW YORK TIMES of April 4, it is interesting to note that in two shorthand contests recently given, one in this country and the other in France, in each case a woman won. A Boston woman wrote 225 words a minute for 15 minutes and another won the championship in typewriting. In the contest in Paris, a woman won over 150 competitors by writing 16,500 words in four houre. An American woman has surpassed the Frenchwoman's record, for she once wrote 10,500 words in 2½ hours.

A Changed Commonwealth.

From Collier's Weekly.

To secure good articles is difficult. One of those we most desire we probably should be most unable to secure, thanks partly to proprieties of diplomacy. Our wish is keen that the new Ambassador from England might illuminate these pages with his thought concerning a question in American statesmanship. A scant two decades ago, in his "American Commonwealth," he wrote: "An American may, through a long life, never be reminded of the Federal Government, except when he votes at Presidential and Congressional elections, lodges a complaint against the Post Office, and opens his trunk for a Custom House officer on the pier at New York when he returns from a tour of Europe." After reviewing the immense compass of State functions Mr. Bryce decided that "Jefferson would seem to have been not far wrong when he said that the Federal Government was nothing more than the American department of foreign affairs." The author who wrote this returns to find his American in touch with the Federal power in some of the most ordinary minutiae of daily life—when he buys a pound of meat, goes to the druggist for medicine, buys coffee at the corner grocery, or secures a railroad ticket. Soon the age at which his child may go to work promises to be regulated at Washington, and one subject, bankruptcy, has been transferred bodily from Mr. Bryce's list of State functions to the expanding scope of Federal activities. An essay on the whither and the why from the pen of Mr. Bryce would be a valuable contribution to the flood of thought which was recently increased by Mr. Root.

To Walk Across the Channel.

From The London Telegraph.

PARIS, March 20.—The French press is giving prominence here to the proposition of Capt. Oldrieve, the American, to walk across the Channel in a pair of boots which may literally be called boats. The Captain is said to have walked in these boots, which resemble skis adapted to water, from Pittsburg to New Orleans, down the Ohio and Mississippi. If the Captain has been able to make such a march that across the Channel must appear a very small thing indeed, and one wonders why he did not walk across the ocean to show what he "really" could do if he were permitted.

THE QUESTION.

O Sun, in the heavens stand still!
Moon, pause on your wonderful way!
A question the earth shall soon fill—
Await ye the answer, I pray!

They've found it! The soul of a man!
What marvel of science more great?
Imagine it, please, if you can—
A Spirit—located by weight!

Now this is the question, I say—
Come out, O ye Wise, from your dens,
And answer me truly to-day,
Are Women's souls bigger than Men's?

"There's a Reason"

MISS JEFFREYS MAY RETURN TO LONDON

English Actress, Now on Tour, Plans to Become Her Own Manager.

IF LIEBLERS CONSENT

Her Contract Still Has Two Years to Run, but It Will Probably Be Amicably Adjusted.

A report reached town yesterday from Binghamton that Ellis Jeffreys, the English actress who for the last few years has been playing in America under the management of Liebler & Co., was about to cancel her contract and return to England. Miss Jeffreys, who is now on tour with William H. Crane, under the Liebler management, in their revival of "She Stoops to Conquer," appeared last night at the Stone Opera House in Binghamton.

Miss Jeffreys plans to return to London not merely in the capacity of an actress, but as her own manager. She has already chosen certain plays, for the English rights of which it is understood she is now negotiating. If Liebler & Co. consent to the dissolution of the contract, which still has a year or two to run, she will leave for England at the end of the present theatrical season.

When a representative of Liebler & Co. was questioned he would neither deny nor confirm the report that Miss Jeffreys and her managers were on the point of amicably severing their present connection. However, it is generally understood that the matter is now under consideration and will be definitely settled within the next forty-eight hours.

Ellis Jeffreys came to this country under the management of Liebler in 1905, and made her first New York appearance in March of that year at the New Amsterdam Theatre in "The Prince Consort," by Cosmo Gordon Lennox. She had previously been leading woman of the Haymarket Theatre in London.

Among the other pieces in which she has appeared in New York are the revival of "London Assurance" at the Knickerbocker, "The Fascinating Mr. Vandervelt," last season at Daly's, and "The Dear Unfair Sex," with which she opened this present season at the Liberty Theatre.

Miss Jeffreys, if she carries out her present plans, will be the only actress-manager in London, with the single exception of Ellen Terry. Though London abounds in such actor-managers as Cyril Maude, George Alexander, and Beerbohm Tree, women have seldom entered the managerial field.

STUDENTS IN SIX PLAYS.

Stanhope-Wheatcroft School Gives Its Second Matinee.

The second students' matinée of the Stanhope-Wheatcroft Dramatic School was given yesterday afternoon at the Casino. The programme contained six one-act plays, most of them now presented for the first time. These plays were "The Flying Wedge," by Grace Livingston Furniss; "Cupid's Messenger," by Alfred C. Calmour; "Nobility," and "A Bachelor's Wife," by Alice Yates Grant; "The Letter of the Law," by Elizabeth Wander, and "Mere Man," by Herbert Swears. The audience was large.

"Cupid's Messenger," a little costume play with Sir Philip Sydney as a leading character, portrayed by young Mr. Stanhope Wheatcroft, was much applauded. Fannie Hartz, who appeared as Mary Herbert and had a rôle of essentially soubrette character, met with special approbation.

In "The Letter of the Law," a problem play, the leading rôle was played by Elizabeth Wander, the author. Miss Wander's appearance was perhaps the most notable event of the afternoon.

FAY TEMPLETON TO RETIRE.

Says She Will Make Her Last Appearance in New York.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 11.—Miss Fay Templeton, who is playing here in "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," has but five weeks more of stage life to live, unless she changes her mind. The engagement which she is soon to play in New York will be the last under her present contract, and the comedienne avows that she will make no more contracts.

Since her marriage to William Patterson of Pittsburg last Summer she has looked forward to the time when she should be free to retire to private life and this time is now near.

PLAY FOR HATTIE WILLIAMS.

It May Be One of Clyde Fitch's, with Music.

Hattie Williams, so it was said yesterday, is to appear next year in a play by Clyde Fitch, with music.

Representatives of Mr. Frohman, who is abroad, and without whose presence no definite arrangement would scarcely be entered into, said that Miss Williams would begin next season in "The Little Cherub," the piece in which she recently appeared at the Criterion.

She is to return to the city later in the season with a new piece, but its nature has not been announced and is not known positively to have been determined.

Max Bendix Conducts "Lucia."

"Lucia" was sung at the Manhattan Opera House last evening before a moderate audience. The cast included Mme. Pinkert in the mad scene, accompanied by the flute; Bonci as Ashton, and Mr. Sévelhac, who, as Raimundo, sang effectively. The novelty of the performance was furnished by Max Bendix, the concertmeister, who appeard as conductor, and held his forces well in hand.

Dixey Appeals from Bischoff Order.

An appeal was taken yesterday on behalf of Henry E. Dixey by his attorneye from the order of Justice Bischoff enjoining him from acting under the management of any one except Walter N. Lawrence. By order of Justice Bischoff Mr. Lawrence is to-day to furnish a $5,000 bond to hold Mr. Dixey harmless on account of this injunction.

Frohman to Produce New Comedy.

Daniel Frohman has commissioned Rida Johnson Young, author of "The Boys of Company B," the new play in which Arnold Daly is now appearing at the Lyceum Theatre, to write another comedy on modern American life. This new play will be produced at the Lyceum Theatre next year.

AMUSEMENT NOTES.

Marshall Darrach will give the first of three recitals of Shakespearean plays under the auspices of the League for Political Education on Saturday morning in the Hudson Theatre. The first play will be "The Merchant of Venice."

The celebration at the Hippodrome after the performance to-night in honor of the second anniversary of the house has been abandoned because Mr. Temple, the stage director, is out of town.

William T. Kelly is to begin his second week in vaudeville at Keith & Proctor's 125th Street Theatre with the production of a one-act piece by T. C. Davies, entitled "The Marshall."

B. W. B. Brown, Aldermán of the Twenty-ninth District, has arranged for a theatre party at the American Theatre on Saturday evening. Gov. Hughes is among those announced to be present.

Etta Hawkins, a former member of Charles Frohman's stock company, will reappear on the stage of the Lincoln Square Theatre for next week only to resume her original character of Cinders in "The Lost Paradise." Miss Hawkins is now the wife of William Morris, manager of the stock company which bears his name.

R. C. OGDEN RE-ELECTED.

Educators Refuse to Let Him Retire from Presidency.

Special to The New York Times.

PINEHURST, N. C., April 11.—Robert C. Ogden of New York was re-elected President of the Conference for Education in the South to-day. The high regard in which he is held is shown by general praise in the Southern newspapers, and by the applause at the meeting this morning when news was received of his improved health. The other officers were re-elected, with the exception of Charles B. Laycock of North Carolina, who was succeeded as Vice President by G. Jordan of Georgia.

This was farmers' day at the convention. Fully eighty-five per cent. of the Southern people live outside of towns, and agricultural improvements, therefore, are much discussed. Dr. Seaman A. Knapp of Cape Charles set the ball rolling this morning. He is a special agent of the Department of Agriculture, but has a connection equally important with the General Education Board, which is furnishing much of the money for his work. He said in part:

"The large body of freed men settled throughout the rural districts of the South has tended to lower farm values and depress agriculture. The effect is not the result of color, but is caused by the lower plane of living. We have lived under a slavery where the chains are ingeniously forged and the bands riveted with gold. It is all the same in effect, the impoverishment of the masses."

Agricultural banks, he said, should be established to assist in carrying out the plan of colonizing the country with thrifty home owners.

A meeting of the College Presidents was held this afternoon, to discuss the lack of teachers. It was decided to emphasize the value of teaching as a vocation on every possible occasion, and to carry the campaign to the State Boards in their Commonwealths. Prof. Edwin Mims of Trinity College, North Carolina, delivered an address to-night on the benefits obtained by the South in learning educational lessons from the North.

The following telegram from Mr. Ogden was received at the closing session:

"Thanks for telegram. Congratulations upon successful and progressive outcome of the tenth year of conference. This should be the best year in every part of the field."

ARTS IN MANY FORMS.

New York Keramic Arts Open Their Exhibition.

The galleries of the National Arts Club and the rooms of the Society of Craftsmen, in the club's annex, have been crowded every afternoon and evening with visitors to a double opening, viz., the annual exhibition of the New York Society of Keramic Arts and a special exhibit by the Society of Craftsmen of objects suitable for country and Summer homes.

These two societies have no connection one with the other, although both belong to the list of art organizations in friendly alliance with the Arts Club. They chose, however, to hold receptions on the same day. A Roumanian band enlivened the occasion, which was extremely successful in every way.

The Keramic Society has invited this year a number of exhibits of an artistic sort from various terra cotta companies which deal in large decorative work for architects. They have sent medallions and figures in high relief glazed in white and blue, big vases for terrace and porch, tiles, and other decorations for exteriors. Another innovation is a small collection of choice plaques and vases of old Persian, Rhodian, Damascus, and other wares belonging to bygons schools of the Levant.

Beautiful china painting is shown by Fry, Mrs. Leonard, and other members of the society, but there are also American porcelains from the Connault and other kilns, and pottery from the ateliers of a score of able workers of both sexes, tiles of all kinds, and a thousand objects which have been modeled and fired, from statuettes to candlesticks. Flower vases and wall pockets, jardinieres and broad bowls for water lilies and other aquatic plante, window boxes for growing flowers, and quaint sets of new chocolate drinkers are to be seen in orderly arrangement, the lighter and more precious pieces in glass cases, where they cannot be handled and harmed.

Pueblo Indian pottery from Laguna, New Mexico, forms a separate exhibit. The Grueby Faience Company shows tiles for hearths and school rooms forming the figures of animals, such as polar bears, elephants, fishes, dolphins, &c.; also some of its splendid yellow vases with cucumber skin. Opening night the catalogue was not ready, but the eager groups of amateurs and artisans were appeased by small placards setting forth at least the names of the makers. Particular interest was paid to pieces of red pottery by Charles Volkmar and the Robertsons of Metuchen, N. J., who have produced tones very similar to the famous peach-blow in the old Chinese porcelain.

The exhibit of the National Society of Craftsmen on the second floor of the annex, though not so large, is more varied, for it includes textiles and carved furniture, whatever in fact, goes to the equipment of the living room of a country house, not to speak of the dining table and the linen closet. Included also is a good deal of jewelry, chiefly of semi-precious stones in settings of silver and copper. There are lanterns and hanging lights, much stoneware, and heavy potteryware modeled in fine big shapes with due regard to the balance of ornament.

What is noticeable in almost all these objects is the touch of the artist, each piece having its separate stamp and individuality. A person fond of kiln-made bric-a-brac might spend hundreds of dollars before he could stop, so many are the unique pieces that any collector might crave for their beauty and rareness. In the carved wood a desk from the Rydingvärd workshop is noticeable, having Norse designs in low relief and on the lifting cover of the desk a scene of Norsemen in battle. Chairs and stools put together of oak in the old fashion and carved in very low relief should not fail to be examined.

Compared to the exhibition the Keramio Society made a couple of years ago, the present show is far the superior in every way, larger and more varied, closer to the taste of a refined and travelled public. One sees none of the estimable but impossible work by amateurs who have not learned their trade, none of the grotesques that come from fantastical but inarticulate minds.

An hour would not be mispent reviewing all these clever individual works. The two exhibitions can be visited afternoon and evening, entrance at 119 East Nineteenth Street.

PANIC IN NEWARK THEATRE.

Fire in Adjoining Building Frightens Audience—$15,000 Damage.

Fire in the four-story brick building at 208 Market Street, Newark, last night created a small panic in the Nswark Theatre, which adjoins it on Beaver Street. Jessie Busley was playing in "The Bishop's Carriage" there and the house was filled.

In the rush to the exits one woman fell and was trampled upon, but not seriously injured. When the crowd got into the street and saw the flames several women fainted and fell on the sidewalk, where firemen were laying hose. None was badly hurt.

The fire started in the basement of the Anheuser-Busch Café, and it was two hours before the blaze was under control. The building was occupied entirely as a café and restaurant, and the dining room was well filled at the time.

The fire spread so rapidly that many had to flee hastily. The firemen confined the flames to the building and only the rear of the theatre was damaged.

The loss to the restaurant company was about $15,000.

LOW PRICES PAID FOR WHITE PICTURES

Many Paintings and Sketches Bring About Half What They Cost.

SENATOR CLARK A BUYER

The Sale Not a Social Function Like the Auction at Murdered Architect's Home.

The first lot of pictures belonging to the estate of the late Stanford White were sold last evening under the direction of the American Art Galleries in Mendelssohn Hall. There were some seventy paintings, with a few sketches. They were largely by American artists, and there was none of the clamor of the sale which surrounded the sale of the furniture and decorations at the White residence, and gave the afternoons there the air of a social function. The returns for the evening were $20,272.50.

Many artists were present at the sale. William M. Chase made several purchases, Senator Clark paid two of the best prices; Edmund Holbrook, the highest of the evening for a Gérôme, $1,600, and William T. Evans, the art collector, the second highest price, $1,550, for a large painting by Thomas W. Dewing, N. A.

The Gérôme was a beautiful picture, "Corneille et Molière—une Collaboration," the two French writers sitting at either end of a long table, the costumes and decorations of the room in the character of the seventeenth century. It was a painting 19 by 28½ inches in size, and sold in the collection of A. T. Stewart in New York in 1887 for $8,100. The artist was awarded the gold medal of honor for it in Paris in 1874.

"Summer Pastime," by Dewing, for which Mr. Evans gave the second highest price, was a picture in pale green tones showing the figures of two young women in evening dress. The most enthusiastic bidding of the sale was for a landscape by Homer D. Martin, N. A., which was bid up to $1,300, when it went to Mr. Evans. This was a picture with a foreground of waste land, a narrow brook, a cloudy sky, and a clump of trees rising over a low farm building at one side.

Senator Clark paid $1,300 for a charming French picture by Monticelli. "Fête in the Garden," many gayly dressed women gathered around small tables in a beautiful park. An excellent Boldini, Italian, "After the Bath," also went to him for $1,050, and J. R. Andrews paid $1,225 for Pegasus, by A. P. Ryder, N. A. A landscape study by Rousseau, which sold in the George I Seney sale for $1,800, went last night to N. Sanborn for $210. A few other pictures brought only half the prices they had in previous sales.

Interesting pictures which brought low prices were original color sketches made by Boulanger for his work in the theatre at Monte Carlo, "Peace," "The Dance," and "Music," which went for $100, $70, and $75. Three pencil sketches by Charles Bargue went for from $10 to $15.

POLICEMAN HAD BRAIN STORM

Offers That Excuse for Being Off Post, but It Isn't Accepted.

Edward L. Quirk, a policeman attached to the West Thirty-seventh Street Station, was on trial before Third Deputy Commissioner Hanson charged with being off post. After hearing the charges Deputy Commissioner Hanson asked:

"Well, Quirk, what's your excuse?"

"I tell you, Commissioner, I had a brain storm," was the policeman's reply.

"What was the cause of the brain storm?" asked Mr. Hanson.

"I don't know."

"Well, why were you off post?"

"I don't know."

"I shall recommend your dismissal from the force," said the Deputy Commissioner.

PORTIAS AGAINST FIGHTS.

Members to Ask Gov. Hughes to Abolish Pugilism.

There will be no more prizefights when universal suffrage arrives, and the Portia Club made its first move against it yesterday at the regular meeting at the Hotel Astor.

Miss Jessie Fowler, who reports the prominent legislative happenings, told of Gov. Hughes's proposed action against prizefighting, and the club decided to indorse it and urge prohibitive measures.

"It is a relic of barbarity," said one of the members, "and ought to be put down." The rest of the club, with one exception, agreed with her.

"But what are the men going to do?" asked Miss Maloney from a back seat. "I don't mean to say that I like prizefighting. I don't. I think it's coarse, but when you think of all the men that go to the prizefights, and all the splendid, elegant gentlemen you see in the cars reading about them, I don't see what you are going to do. They might do something worse."

But the club put it to vote, and it was decided to send a letter to Gov. Hughes expressing disapprobation of prizefighting and individual members were requested to write.

The club also decided not to send a Portia doll to the Actors' Fund Fair. The members had been requested to send one to be raffled for, but the members put a decided veto upon the proposal. Last year the club indulged so largely in charity that it has had an empty treasury ever since.

GEN. EUGENE GRIFFIN DEAD.

Stricken with Apoplexy at a Dinner to Amateur Minstrels.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., April 11.—Gen. Eugene Griffin, first vice-president and manager of the sales department of the General Electric Company, died at his apartments in the Mohawk Club at 1 o'clock this morning without recovering consciousness from a stroke of apoplexy with which he was stricken shortly before midnight.

Gen. Griffin, his wife and daughter, came up from New York yesterday to attend an amateur minstrel show given here last evening by prominent men at the local works of the General Electric Company. Gen. Griffin's son took a prominent part, and following the performance Gen. Griffin gave an informal dinner at the Mohawk Club to the performers. While at the table he suddenly collapsed.

Gen. Griffin was born at Ellsworth, Me., Oct. 13, 1835. He entered the Military Academy at West Point in 1871, and was graduated in 1875. He resigned as Chaplain of the regular army in 1889.

Gen. Griffin organized and commanded the First Regiment United States Volunteer Engineers during the Spanish-American war and was with Gen. Miles in the Porto Rican campaign. He has been first vice-president and sales manager of the General Electric

BASEBALL CROWD CAUSES FORFEIT

Swarm Over Playing Field at Polo Grounds, Stopping the Game.

TWO ARRESTS ARE MADE

Only Good Nature of Crowd Prevents Trouble—Umpire Awards Game to Philadelphia, 9 to 0.

NATIONAL LEAGUE GAMES.

Phila., 9; New York, 0, (forfeited.)
Chicago, 6; St. Louis, 1.
Cincinnati, 4; Pittsburg, 3.
Brooklyn-Boston, (wet grounds.)

SCHEDULE FOR TO-DAY.

Philadelphia at New York.
Brooklyn at Boston.
St. Louis at Chicago.
Pittsburg at Cincinnati.

If the 17,000 people who gathered at the Polo Grounds to witness the opening game of the National League season had not been an especially good-natured crowd it is probable that there would have been other things recorded to mark the start of the annual baseball campaign than the result of a game. When the two teams contending had completed the eighth inning and were about to begin the last inning of the contest the great crowd with one rush overran the field and put a stop to further play. The movement was undoubtedly precipitated by the difficulty which Umpire Klem had in the preceding inning to clear the field of the first of the departing throng who attempted to avoid the crush by cutting across the field. The crowd sided with the stragglers when the umpire sought to hurry, and they jeered the official for refusing to resume the contest until there was no one within the ropes. In the last inning the ringleaders evidently thought it would be good sport to defy his authority.

The instant the Giants tok the field for the last time at least 1,000 men and boys leaped over the fences surrounding the playing enclosure and rushed into right field. There they surrounded George Brown and refused to heed the demands of Klem that they move back within the ropes. The game was halted, but instead of the situation improving hundreds joined the recalcitrants and laughed at the plea of players and officials alike. It was the work of another minute before hundreds of others surrounded the home plate where Klem stood awaiting the possibility of renewing the game, and these laughingly threatened the umpire if he forfeited the game, as he was bound to under the rules. Another minute sufficed to start the kindred spirits in the grand stand throwing cushions into the mass and in an instant there was a whirlwind of cushions flying back and forth. There was danger any minute of some one losing his temper in the mob and precipitating a general outbreak, but good nature eventually prevailed and there was no real difficulty encountered.

The whole trouble was traceable directly to the refusal of Commissioner Bingham to permit the police to serve to keep the crowd in check. Early in the morning orders were issued from headquarters that the Commissioner proposed to enforce the law which forbids the policing of private grounds with the city force. He issued instructions to the precinct Captain that no officers were to be assigned to go within the grounds. He notified the club officials at the same time that they must furnish their own police. Whether the officials determined to make a test case of the matter or not is not known, but they either neglected to provide officers or determined not to do so. There was within the great enclosure when the big crowd finally settled down for the contest exactly two policemen, and these were attached to the police ambulance, which stood in the outfield in case illness or accident required their services. When an appeal was made to them to urge the crowd in front of them to retire, they refused to do other than follow their instructions to perform only their specified service.

When for fifteen minutes the crowd on the field surged back and forth about the players or engaged in the pitched battle with the others in the grandstands and the thousands who kept their seats began to demand that the game proceed, an appeal was sent to the police outside the fence to come to the aid of the club officials. The Sergeant in charge sent an imposing (?) force of four men within and marched them to the front of the grandstand, but refused to take other action. Finally two cushion throwers were arrested and were led away without any protest from their fellows nor any cessation of the cushion throwing and general disorder.

The prisoners gave their names to the police as Joseph Biggs, 21 years old of 203 West 143d Street and William Miller, 23 years old of 208A North Fifth Street, Newark, N. J. They were subsequently locked up charged with disorderly conduct.

By this time it was evident that there was absolutely no chance for the game to proceed and the spectators who kept their seats began to file out of the grounds. The players of both teams threaded their way through the jam on the field to the dressing rooms and the mob, tired of their pranks, gradually withdrew. Umpire Klem meantime had awarded the game to Philadelphia as forfeited, but this provoked no demonstration, for the game was lost in any event. It saved the Giants a shut-out in the official records, however, for the contest then took rank as a forfeiture.

All attempt to get a statement from the officials of the club failed. President Brush was not on the field at all, and Manager McGraw was confined to his bed by an ill-timed illness. Secretary Knowles shut himself up in the private office of the club and refused all requests to be seen. Those who gained access to the office saw him busily writing at his desk, and maintaining Sphinx-like silence when queries were addressed to him.

What will be the outcome of the matter with respect to future games no one can say. To fail to provide protection to the horde of patrons that go to the grounds is considered by many to be risking serious consequences. In event of an accident club and police officials may both have trouble evading responsibility. The National League provides for contingencies of the kind only by the forfeiture of games, but its rules provide that the home club must afford protection to players and officials, and quite likely the National body would accept no excuse for neglect to comply. In a close contest with ill-feeling between the teams there might easily be disastrous consequences. The developments served to enliven an otherwise peculiarly quiet opening.

NO CHANCE TO CHEER.

Crowd Gathers Early, but Its Enthusiasm Lacks Opportunity.

The big crowd went to the grounds with plenty of enthusiasm, expecting a home victory, but had little chance to display it. When the gates were opened at 1 o'clock there was a goodly number congregated without, awaiting the opportunity to enter. Each subsequent elevated train brought its quota until at 2 o'clock there were indications of another record-breaking assemblage. But as the hour for play approached there was an appreciable diminution in the steady stream that had been pouring into the grounds, and toward the last they simply straggled in. Whether the cold weather, or the recent heavy rainfall, or a lack of interest was responsible remains for future days to prove. When play finally began there were not over 17,000 there. These occupied all the seats, and there was a small overflow about the ropes.

It was noticeable that there was a lack of the usual presence of many women in the grand stand. The unpropitious weather conditions were doubtless responsible for this. The smaller number made up for the absentees by keener interest. They were conspicuous in cheering for the favorites among the team when the players finally appeared.

The grounds were dressed in their holiday array, but there was none of the ceremonious flag raising. With a National League pennant and a world's championship emblem to raise last year the club had more than its full share of honors, and probably felt it could dispense with them this season. Two pennenants flew from the flagstaffs in the outfield, one commemorative of the victory of 1904, the other of the greater triumph of 1905. From every pinnacle within the grounds some emblematic flag flew, while draped between were festoons of the National colors and the Star-Spangled Banner.

There was the usual parade of the teams across the field. After the band had given an hour's concert before the stands it marched to the outfield, where the players of the two teams were aligned for their march across the diamond. While the National air was played the entire crowd stood on its feet and cheered wildly, and then settled back for the sober business of the championship race. There was keen interest in what team would be put into the field, and as McGinnity and Ames were sent out to warm up both were cheered to the echo. Philadelphia had both Duggleby and Corridon preparing for the game, but finally Corridon and McGinnity were selected, and that selection, it proved, decided the issue.

The absence of McGraw was speedily remarked, and many a time during the contest the ill-luck of his illness was commented upon with regret, it being said the lack of his inspiriting coaching was responsible for the failure to rise to the demands of the occasion. McGann handled the team well and played a fine game in the field, but at the bat he missed two opportunities to secure the hit that might have turned the tide. The crowd tried several times to rally the men, but Corridon was provokingly cool in every crisis.

Bresnahan created somewhat of a sensation when he appeared behind the bat for the start of play, by donning cricket leg guards. As he displayed himself, togged in mask, protector, and guards, he presented no vulnerable surface for a wild ball to strike. The white shields were rather picturesque, in spite of their clumsiness, and the spectators rather fancied the innovation. They howled with delight when a foul tip in the fifth inning rapped the protectors sharply. But Bresnahan, recollecting the many cracks on the shins he suffered last year, had slightly the better of the situation.

There was a warm welcome for every one, especially for Corcoran when he took his place at bat. He got a small ovation.

HOW THE GAME WAS PLAYED.

Corridon's Effective Pitching Gave the Giants Few Chances.

"Little" Tim Sullivan hurled the ball into the field when the hour was reached for play to begin and the Giants took the field, sending Philadelphia in to bat. There was a glad cry as a strike was called on Roy Thomas, who led off, but it was quickly hushed as he drove an outcurve into right field and made second base by a slide on Brown's slow return of the ball. Spirits revived as McGann cleverly handled Gleason's sacrifice and then held Thomas on third while he retired Titus on a hard hit down the line. But Magee was primed for McGinnity, and used the first of a fusillade of hits he prepared for the occasion, and Thomas romped home on the bad drive to right field, which only Brown's fast sprinting prevented from being stretched into a home run. When Bransfield was retired with only one run scored the crowd settled back to enjoy the Giants' performance.

The effective pitching of one Corridon, whom the "Phillies" sent into the box, however, nipped enthusiasm in the bud. Only one weak little single did he allow the hard-hitting Giants, and this came when it meant little. In the early innings of the game Corridon had poor control, and sent a half dozen men to base on balls. These offered the only chances to score that were presented in the game. But when the critical moment arrived he was always there with his deceptive curves and swift straight balls, and the Giants fell before them.

On the other hand, Philadelphia found McGinnity's delivery whenever it was necessary to score runs. That they only tallied three was due to the particularly sharp and at time brilliant fielding that the men behind him did. McGann saved a run in the opening inning by an especially clever play, and Seymour completed a double play that saved a run after he had made a splendid catch that stopped a couple. There was really nothing to the game but Philadelphia, and had the conditions been reversed there would have been no limit to the enthusiasm.

Corridon was wild at the start, and Shannon drew a pass. Browne lined a hard hit toward right field, which Gleason managed to reach, but it advanced the runner a base, though the batter was retired. Devlin drew a base on balls, and Seymour dropped a perfect bunt down the first-base line, which unfortunately rolled foul when it was evident all three men were safe. Then Corridon pulled himself together and struck out Seymour and retired McGann on a weak little hit in front of the plate, after Bresnahan had been allowed to walk, filling the bases.

It looked like hard luck, but when Corridon repeated the performance in the second inning, after walking two men, it was evident that, though wild, he would be singularly effective. The third inning yielded another base on balls and Seymour's solitary single, and still no run could be scored. Then in the fourth the crowd was cheered a bit by sharp fielding that pulled New York out of a hole.

One was out when Magee came up with another clean safe drive. Bransfield followed with a second single, and Courtney started one that looked safe, but which Corcoran stopped and managed to catch the runner to second base. Then Courtney began a steal, and a quick throw to McGinnity caught him between the bases, and he was thrown out by Corcoran. Still the Giants could do nothing, and Philadelphia added a second run in their essay.

Doolin and Jacklitsch singled, and Corridon's out allowed Doolin to score. Thomas struck out, and Corcoran made another good stop on Gleason, retiring the side. One New Yorker got to base in the Giants' half, when Courtney fumbled Seymour's bounder, but neither Bresnahan nor McGann were equal to the emergency, though Seymour stole second base. Then came the Philadelphia fusillade, which sharp fielding alone prevented scoring more than once. Titus, Magee, and Bransfield singled, the former scoring, while both the others advanced on Courtney's long fly to Browne. Then Doolin drove out a long hit to centre labeled for the ropes. Seymour started with the ball, and just managed to reach it as it was passing over his shoulder, and turned and threw it to second base before Bransfield could recover the bag.

There was no further scoring by either side. The crowd tried hard to work off their superfluous enthusiasm in the "lucky seventh" without a semblance of a chance to cheer. They repeated the performance in the eighth when Shannon and Seymour were walked, but Browne's sacrifice and Devlin's hard hit, which resulted in Shannon's being run down between bases, made two out, and Bresnahan's hit to Gleason retired the side. Then came the overflow of the crowd into the field, the consequent confusion, and the forfeiture of the game. The actual playing score was:

WASHINGTON, April 11.—The largest crowd that ever witnessed an athletic event in this city saw New York win the opening game of the American League season here to-day by the score of 3 to 2. There were 12,902 paid admissions. Although both pitchers were hit rather freely, the game resolved itself into a battle between Al Orth and Tom Hughes. Both had excellent control, but the Highlanders bunched four hits, including a triple and a double, in the fourth inning, and scored two runs and the game. New York'a other run came in the opening round as a result of singles by Hoffman and Eberfeld, and an error by Ganley, who threw wildly to second base to stop Hoffman.

Washington scored in the seventh inning. With two gone Keeler and Hoffman allowed Perrine's high fly to drop between them, and the new second baseman scored with Blankenship after an infield hit, when Hughes sent a two-bagger into the crowd.

Although the weather was hardly as cold as was expected last night, the conditions were still unfavorable and the players were unable to do their best work because of a stiff wind which blew across the field. The particular features of the game were catches by Keeler and Conroy, a one-handed stop by Perrine, and the rare fest performed by Hughes of striking out Willie Keeler.

Hoffman smacked the first ball pitched in the opening inning to right field for a single, but in throwing to second Ganley heaved it to the stand and Hoffman pulled up at second. He moved up on Keeler's sacrifice and tallied on Eberfeld's clean safety to centre. Neither team got a man as far as the second during the next two innings, but in the fourth the Highlanders made two runs.

Elberfeld walked and Williams filed out to right. Leporte ripped off a low liner that rolled to the ropes, scoring Elberfeld, while the runner pulled up at third. Washington raised a howl, claiming that the ball had gone into the crowd and that the batter was entitled to only two bases, but Umpire Connelly ruled otherwise. A moment later Leporte counted when Conroy hit to left. Kleinow doubled, but both men were left when Orth went out on a fly.

In the seventh inning, when it appeared as though the locals were doomed to a shut-out, Washington made two. With two gone Perrine lifted a fly to right centre, and Hoffman and Keeler gathered around the ball, but each expected the other to take it, and it fell safe. Then came Tom Hughes with a double into the crowd that sent Cross across the pan with the final run of the game. Each team got a man on in the ninth, but the next three batters went out in order. Takes Fourteen Innings to Win.

PHILADELPHIA, April 11.—Boston defeated Philadelphia in the opening game of the season after a fourteen-inning session. With the score 3 to 2 in the ninth inning, and two hands out, Murphy fumbled a grounder and let two runs in. The local team tied the score in its half. Neither side scored until the fourteenth inning, when Boston tallied 4 runs on solid hitting. The score:

DETROIT, Mich., April 11.—With the thermometer at 40 degrees and Umpire Sheridan working in a heavy overcoat, Mullin shut out Cleveland and pitched a remarkable opening game, allowing three infield hits. DON'T WANT SALOONS.

Boynton Beach Residents Object to Licensing Sewaren Hotel.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., April 11.—Judge Theodore B. Booraem is to be called upon to-morrow to decide whether Boynton Beach, a Sunday school resort, shall stick to soda water and ginger pop, or whether cocktails and highballe may be served so close that the beach will lose its distinction as a temperance resort. The application of Miss Bock, who conducts the Sewaren Hotel, for a license is to come up in court to-morrow.

C. W. Boynton, owner and proprietor of Boynton Beach, has protested to the authorities of Woodbridge Township and to Judge Booraem against granting the license. There are no saloons in Sewaren, and nearly all the land was sold subject to a restriction aiming to keep out the liquor traffic.

WASHINGTON, April 11.—The Amateur Cup race, at six furlongs, was the magnet that attracted a large crowd to the Benning course this afternoon. The Amateur Cup was instituted in 1902, and is a race for gentlemen riders. It is a high-weight selling affair, and has always proved popular at the track, Washington and Baltimore amateurs always taking a lively interest in it. The clubhouse was well filled by society folk, and the race was probably the best betting affair of the meeting among the women. Everything, from a pair of gloves to a sovereign, was wagered

WILL TOUR EUROPE IN AMERICAN CAR

Dupuy Sails To-morrow to Perfect Plans for Motor Invasion of Continent.

NINETEEN AUTOS ENTERED

Gold Cup Manager to Make Preliminary Run Over 4,000-Mile Route —English Club Offers Aid.

With an actual entry of nineteen cars and twenty-seven persons for the American gold cup tour of Europe, Georges Dupuy, the manager of this novel pleasure competition, will sail for Europe tomorrow on the Vaderland for the purpose of making a preliminary run over the 4,000-mile route to be traveled in July and August by the American tourists. True to all of the features that will be carried out throughout the trip, Mr. Dupuy will take with him on the same steamer an American car, a thirty-horse power Stearns machine. It will be crated and placed on the boat to-day, and, as the Vaderland docks at Antwerp, Mr. Dupuy will begin his run at that city, following the road from Brussels to Paris that will be used by the tourists late in August when nearing the end of their long run.

While Mr. Dupuy will do practically all of the driving himself, he will take along as chauffeur Clarence Shappelke, who has been driving the Stearns demonstrating cars for some time in this city from the Broadway agency of Wyckoff, Church & Partridge.

"I will go at once to Paris," said Mr. Dupuy yesterday, "and the first thing I will do will be to secure a block of grand stand seats for the Grand Prix race at Dieppe on July 2. The $1,000 entrance fee for the tour includes seats for this big French contest. About May 1 I expect to start on my run around the Continent, and I will follow the original itinerary unless poor conditions render it best to make minor changes in the route. I will run up to Havre from Paris, then go to Brest and through the Loire country, crossing the Pyrenees into Spain, where I will make arrangements for a night's stop in Barcelona. Recrossing the Pyrenees, the route will follow the Mediterranean coast along the south of France into Italy, stopping at Genoa, Florence, Rome, and perhaps Naples. The northern run will lead through the Salzburg and Tyrol Mountains, one of the most picturesque sections of Europe, stopping at Vienna, Berlin, Cologne, Brussels, back to Paris, and then over to England, ending with a run through the English country from London to Liverpool.

Mr. Dupuy will be required to travel from 150 to 200 miles a day in many instances, as he is anxious to return to New York early in June and finish preparations for the sailing of the American touring party by a French Line steamer on June 20.

Secretary J. W. Orde of the Royal Automobile Club of Great Britain sent word to Mr. Dupuy this week, saying that the English autoists are taking great interest in the coming tour, and on behalf of the club he offered to do everything that might add to the conveniences of the American motorists by securing the proper English licenses, so there will be no delay when the party lands at Dover from Calais. Mr. Orde stated that if desired he would request the club's representative at Havre to have the necessary French license and registration papers in readiness, provided the required information concerning the various cars and their horse power was sent to him a few days in advance.

An entry of a Columbia car from California was received yesterday. It has been entered by Fernando Nelson of San Francisco, who has made several fast runs between that city and Los Angeles.

Fuel Test Run a Success.

From the partial report of the official observers who took part in the comparative fuel test run of three Maxwell cars last week from Trenton to Atlantic City the results were particularly favorable to the car using the combination fuel of kerosene and gasoline. The three cars completed the run successfully, and when weighed after the run in Atlantic City, with the passengers and baggage, the car using alcohol weighed 2,560 poumds, the one using kerosene and gasoline 2,470 pounds, and the gasoline car 2,450 pounds. The alcohol car used 14½ gallons of fuel, the gasoline car 7½ gallons, and the one with the combination fuel used 3 gallons of kerosene and 5 of gasoline.

TO INVESTIGATE CANADIANS.

A. A. U. Will Demand Explanations of Longboat Rulings.

The Canadian Amateur Athletic Union has announced the suspension of all Canadian lacrosse players who participated in the games of the Canadian Lacrosse Association and all the athletes who competed against them. The decision will involve upward of fifteen hundred athletes, including those teams which plan to visit the United States and play games with the Crescent Athletic Club. It will notify the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States of its action, and request the support of the latter body in its rulings.

But the Canadian Amateur Athletic Union may reckon without its host. The Amateur Athletic Union has tired of pulling chestnuts out of the fire for the Canadian Amateur Athletic Union, and it does not intend to play the catspaw blindly any longer. It has been involved in one nasty skating mess by the necessity of supporting the Canadian Amateur Athletic Union in its queer rulings, and it does not propose to be involved in more without investigation. The investigation will come in another curious ruling by the Canadian Association, and may in the end mean a severance of the articles of alliance between the two bodies. The case in point is that of Longboat.

Longboat is the Indian runner, who it will be remembered was disqualified by the Canadian Association on the eve of his appearance at the New York Athletic Club games at Madison Square Garden. Just seven days before Longboat had competed with the full sanction of the Canadian A. A. U. His suspension on the eve of the game cut out the proposed race with Frank Nebrick. Now seven days before the Marathon race, to be held by the Boston A. A. at Boston, he is reinstated by the Canadian body and given a permit to compete in Boston.

Inquiry by the A. A. U. of the United States has failed to elicit any explanation as to the cause of the disqualification or the reinstatement, and the A. A. U. officials do not propose to disqualify and reinstate at the pleasure of a foreign body without proper explanations when questions are asked. Accordingly the A. A. U. will decline to reinstate Longboat until it has investigated his status for itself, not from any animus against Longboat, but simply to assure itself of the properieties of the case.

New Curtis Steam Yacht Launched.

Cyrus Curtis's new twin-screw steel steamer Lyndonia was successfully launched at Morris Heights yesterday morning. Gayly decorated with flags, she was christened by Mr. Curtis's daughter, Mrs. Edward Bok of Philadelphia. A large party of Philadelphians witnessed the ceremony and afterward were entertained at luncheon aboard the new yacht. Among these were John Gribbel, Miss Isabel Gribbel, Miss Margaret Latta, and Miss Ida Gibb, of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Spalding and E. Dudley James, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Curtis, and Mr. and Mrs. Bok.

The yacht is 175 feet over all, 147 feet on the water line, 20 feet beam, and 12 feet depth and 8 feet draught. She is schooner rigged, with flush deck, and equipped with two triple-expansion engines capable of driving her at an average speed of 20 miles an hour.

The boat will have her trial trip next week, and then cruise to Jamestown for the opening of the Exposition.

WOMEN PLAY AT NETS.

Miss Iselin and Mrs. Barger-Wallach Win in Inter-City Meet.

Miss Eleonora Sears and Miss Marion Fenno, Boston's brilliant lawn tennis team, met with reverses in the opening matches of the Women's Inter-City Championship series yesterday. They were decisively beaten in the doubles, due to the splendid racquet work of Miss Nora Iselin on the canvas-covered court of the St. Nicholas Rink, Sixty-sixth Street and Columbus Avenue. Miss Iselin, and Mrs. Barger-Wallach of New York comprise what is known as the Newport team. In the match the Newporters came through with unexpected ease when once Miss Iselin had her brilliant placing and driving game in order. They won at 8-6 and 6-1, and will meet the Philadelphians, the Misses Green, to-day for the title and trophies.

The opening of the tournament attracted a thoroughly representative society gathering to the rink, and the playing of the women called forth merited applause. Among the society folk were famous players of the game, including "Bob" Wrenn, George L. Wrenn, Jr., William A. Larned, Theodore Roosevelt Pell, and others. The rink was decorated with flags and lanterns, presenting the aspect of a garden, with the grass-green of the canvas playing surface. This idea was further carried out by the serving of tea and toast and cakes to those assembled in the balcony boxes. It was from this perch of vantage that Miss Juliet Adee of the Westchester Country Club tennis contingent acted as referee and scorer.

The singles matches were the first put on the courts. With surprising rapidity Miss Scott of New York played swift passes through Miss Fenno's court. The Bostonian never fairly settled to her usual game so that Miss Scott came off the victor in straight sets. Mrs. Barger-Wallach won a closer match with Miss Phyllis Green. The Philadelphian, who has contested in many of the national championships, endeavored to outplay Mrs. Barger-Wallach at her favorite driving game in the last set. The sureness of the Newport players returns held her safe, however, despite the last set touching deuce at 7-5.

Miss Phyllis Green and Miss Marjory Green played a splendid game in the doubles. They outplayed Miss Scott and Miss Coster at every point and the New Yorkers were left setlees. Miss Iselin's racquet work was the feature of the doubles match, in which the Boston pair met with defeat. She is tall and of the Gibson-girl type, so that her smashes came off with such force as to keep the spectators applauding. The summary:

Women's Intercity Championship Singles.—First Round—Miss Emily Scott, New York, defeated Miss Marion Fenno, Boston, 6—2, 6—4; Mrs. Barger-Wallach, Newport, defeated Miss Phyllis Green, Philadelphia, 6—3, 7—5.

Women's Intercity Championship Doubles.—Miss Phyllis Green and Miss Marjory Green, Philadelphia, defeated Miss Emily Scott and Miss Martha Coster, New York, 6—2, 6—3; Mrs. Barger-Wallach and Miss Nora Iselin, Newport, defeated Miss Eleonora Sears and Miss Marion Fenno, Boston, 8—6, 6—1.

BLUE FOR FOREST KING.

Champion's Victory Was Feature of Brooklyn Horse Show.

The horse show of the Riding and Driving Club of Brooklyn drew the best and largest attendance of the exhibition last night. The boxes were filled throughout, the club house and the galleries and aisles were crowded when the chief class of the evening went into the ring, for what in its conditions was merely an ordinary single harness horse competition, but which drew out the best material of the show, and, in the opinion of the crowd of experts, practically decided the Eagle Cup contest, one of the big events of the show, set for to-night.

The entries for last night's ring practically were the same as those for the cup to-night, and included the old-time show ring champion, W. H. Moore's Forest King, the blue ribbon winning mare Hildred, owned by Miss Emily H. Bedford, and the contender in many high quality rings; J. W. Harriman's Avondale Farm horse Nola, are regarded as the three chief competitors in to-night's contest. Six horses showed, all driven to gigs, and the owners in most cases driving, with Miss Bedford, behind Hildred, as the only woman exhibitor. The contest was a singularly keen one, and when Forest King, showing in superb style, won from Nola second, and Hildred third, the result was regarded as practically settling the contest for the cup, which having been won last season by Forest King, will become the permanent property of Forest King's owner should the veteran ring champion win again to-night.

Though beaten in that contest, Miss Bedford's Hildred, showing in about her best form, earned consolation for her owner in the ladies' victoria horse class, when ladies driving, Miss Bedford took the blue ribbon from a remarkably pretty ring, with Miss McMaxwell's Adonis, driven by the owner, second; Harry D. Hollaway's Grand Duchess, driven by Mrs. John Gerken, third, and Tonzo Savage's Blue Bell, driven by Mrs. Beach, fourth.

Fifteen entries, making up the largest ring of the show, competed in the class for maiden saddle horses, half a dozen of the number being ridden by women and the competitors including a number of horses absolutely new to Eastern show rings. In a close contest, the blue ribbon went to Otto H. Kohn's Supreme, with Rufus L. Patterson's thoroughbred gelding Cardoman second.

Judge William H. Moore, with two entries in the ring, himself drove the winner in the first competition of the evening, when behind the showy King Forest, he drove off with the blue ribbon for single harness horses 14.2 hands and not exceeding 15 hands. The second Moore entry, Perfection, took third place, behind J. W. Harriman's Avondale Farm horse, Leader of Fashion.

Only three horses showed in the competition for ladies' saddle horses, ridden by ladies, and the award went to Mrs. John Gerken's Surprise, ridden by the owner, with the Harriman entry, May Morning, ridden by Mrs. Belle Beach Bath, second. In the ring for four in hand park teams, the three crack turnouts of the show competed, the blue ribbon going to J. W. Harriman's Avondale Farm team, driven by Jack Donnelly, with Judge W. H. Moore's four, driven by the owner, second.

Trout fishing in the New Jersey streams has been poor owing to the cold weather, but with the higher temperature anglers should find plenty of sport, as the streams are all well stocked.

The Mohican Fishing Club will make its first trip on Snnday, April 28. The start will be made from the clubhouse at Hammels at 5 A. M.

The fourth annnal clambake of the Lafayette Fishing Club will be held on the last Sunday in August.

Sunday, April 28, has been selected by the Tornado Fishing Club for the first trip of the season. The Sinbad will leave Canarsis at 6:30 A. M.

The opening of the trout fishing season in Pennsylvania, which takes place on April 15, is generally marked in the Poconos with an influx of the disciples of Izaak Walton from New York. At Spruce Cabin, in the heart of the Pocono Mountains, enthusiastic gatherings of sportsmen are preparing for the fray with the most wily and gamy of all fresh-water fish, the speckled trout.

Two hundred codfish, ranging from 6 to 27 pounds; 200 blackfish, averaging four pounds, and a number of bengals and cunners were caught yesterday by fishermen on the steamer Angler on the Farms. The honors of the day went to John Roglan, who landed six cod and nine blackfish.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Close Lower—Call Money Rates, 2½@1¾ Per Cent.

ENGLISH BANK LOWERS RATE

Reduction to 4½ Per Cent. Reflects Better Money Position — Question of St. Paul's Coast Extension.

After a preliminary advance, which ran with more or less irregularity up to the noon hour of yesterday's stock market session, prices turned about and in the closing hour fell with such rapidity as to leave many acquisitions with losses of from 1 to 3 points at the day's end. The impulse toward higher prices in the early trading came largely from the announcement that the Bank of England had reduced its discount rate from 5 per cent. to 4½ per cent. This confirmed the hopes which had been built upon the growing ease in money in London and the movement of the foreign exchange market against American importers of gold. The influence of the announcement, however, failed to last, disappearing entirely in the afternoon upon the spread of a small "crop scare" and the reported statement of the President of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad that that company, as a result of hostile legislation, had under consideration the question of abandoning for the time being its extension to the Pacific Coast, work on which has been long under way. The talk of a crop shortage found no basis in fact, of course, and prices upon Produce Exchanges failed wholly to reflect any fear of such an outcome upon these markets. The sentiment attributed to the head of the St. Paul constitutes a much more serious matter, but inasmuch as the money for pushing its line to the coast has been, for practical purposes, already provided, and the project is necessary to the full development of the system, it seems unlikely it will be definitely abandoned. There was also much discussion in financial circles of the probable readjustment of the Union Pacific's Executive Committee. The belief generally expressed was that a step of this kind would be an excellent move on the part of those in any way interested in the property. There occurred during the day another decline in the price of copper metal upon the local Metal Exchange, but the market is so largely controlled by the great producing interests that these public quotations are accepted with many reservations. The iron trade authority in its compilation of production figures for the month of March disclosed a slight decrease in outturn compared with the earlier months of the year.

Reason is found in the Bank of England's weekly return, as well as in the position of foreign money markets, for its failure to reduce its official discount rate more than one-half of 1 per cent. The proportion of reserve to liabilities is 2.13 per cent. above that of a week ago, but is still the lowest since 1900, when the market was affected by the Boer war demands. The reduction, small as it is, indicates growing confidence in the money markets. The foreign exchange markets were firm, in spite of the reduction, and the local money markets were again marked by the lowering of quotations for time funds. The banks have gained practically $1,700,000 from the Sub-Treasury since Friday of last week.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Western houses were active on the selling side of the market yesterday. It did not seem to be a concerted movement, and had its origin apparently in a new interpretation of the crop report of yesterday. Houses which are identified with the grain market seem to be prominent in the bearish movement, although one or two of them bought stocks in the early trading. It is difficult to ascribe any particular significance to this kind of trading. It requires a very subtle analysis to reveal anything serious in the crop situation as it stands to-day. But from this time on crops will be used as explanations of market movements, irrespective of their real connection with the price fluctuations.

***

Houses which have an extensive wire system receive daily bundreds of queries from all parts of the country on all possible subjects. There is no possible influence on stock prices that does not find a current query in the wireroom of these houses. Some of these questions are absurd. The New York members of houses with Western offices have to be very careful in giving advice. Almost invariably any advice on stocks is acted upon, and, of course, unless there is some foundation for the information, there is a possibility of trouble if the guess does not go right. One man in the financial district who is very friendly with a big wirehouse made it a point at one time to buy a few bundred shares of an inactive stock and then have a tip sent over the wires advising its purchase. The orders received in consequence were usually enough to put the stock up sufficiently for the astute individual to take in a good profit.

***

Men identified with the copper trade are not paying much attention to the controversy as to what the prices quoted for the metal by the selling agents and the Metal Exchange mean. They are more concerned with the ultimate developments in the trade. Technically, there is a slight recession in the demand for the metal, but this is caused, not by any reduction in the real needs, but by the withholding of orders to take advantage of the possibility of a decline. When the metal eased off in London, many would-be purchasers withheld their orders, but the most important interests in the copper trade say there is little chance of any real decline in price, and if those who have been withholding their orders all come in at once, a sharp advance even beyond recent high prices is entirely possible.

***

Quotations for copper metal always show a slightly higher price for Lake copper than for electrolytic. Of course, there was a very good reason for that difference in price a few years ago, and the sentimental reason still exists. When electrolytic copper was first brought into prominence, the tests showed that it did not possess the same tensile strength as Lake copper. Since that time, however, the electrolytic process has been reduced to an exact science, and this difference between the two coppers is not really a factor. That, however, was the origin of the difference in price. It is a curious fact, however, that some of the companies in the Lake region are now confronted with the necessity of introducing the electrolytic process.

***

Several professional operators in stocks admit readily that they have no desire to make large commitments at present. These men are big players ordinarily, but the events of the last six weeks seem to have affected their nerve. One man who was usually conspicuous on the floor confines himself to small orders in one of the offices where he makes his headquarters. Yesterday he scalped a little profit on the long side of one or two stocks, but his general attitude toward the market was absolutely wrong in the light of subsequent trading. He is regarded as a good tape reader. He admits himself that he is absolutely at sea at present. Amateurs often rail at their inability to call the turn in stocks, but they would find comfort if they knew how often the man who makes a profession of the game fails to diagnose the true condition of the speculative market.

***

Some attention was attracted by the sharp rise in Standard Oil yesterday. It is practically certain that when the litigation now in progress against the company is out of the way the capitalization will be increased, probably to $500,000,000. No one has any idea of the real value of Standard Oil stock. Its earnings are on an enormous scale, and those who are familiar with its condition generally believe that it would be expedient to increase the capital stock.

***

Directors of the Amalgamated Copper Company will meet next Thursday to consider the dividend. There is no question, apparently, as to the rate that will be declared. It will be the same as the last quarter. Many stockholders wonder why the stock is not placed on a permanent 8 per cent. basis instead of the present 6 per cent. basis, with 2 per cent. extra. Conditions in the trade would warrant making the dividend a straight 8 per cent. rate, and if conditions generally were all right it might have been expected that this would be done next week.

***

One of the after effects of the San Francisco earthquake has been the gradual closing out of real estate holdings in the neighborhood of that city and the investment of the funds so realized in Eastern bonds. Usually the investments are in first mortgage bonds, well secured, of course, and netting about 4 per cent. It would be interesting to find out how many investments of this nature have been made recently. Within a few days the proceeds of one large parcel in San Francisco found its way into first mortgage issues of Eastern roads.

***

Little by little the Street is getting an idea of the identity of the big men who were hurt in the March smash. But there are many credited with having made profits who suffered severely. One man, who is identified with several industrial concerns, the securities of which have no market, or at least only a limited market, was long of one of the high-priced issues which broke violently. He was able to meet his margin calls only through the courtesy of a banking house, which accepted the securities of his company as collateral for a loan. He was tided over temporarily, but on the first good rally he sold out with an enormous loss. Still the popular notion is that he made a lot of money.

***

Time money continues easy and call rates are merely nominal. Bankers find a profitable field for their surplus funds, however, in commercial paper, and the lack of demand for time money from brokerage houses is, for the present at least, a matter of less moment than would be the case ordinarily. Paper bearing the best names at 6 per cent. is a good investment, and the business now being done is very heavy. The ease in call money has induced many brokers not to renew time loans falling due. There are a number of big houses in the Street always in the market for time money at a price. They will consider bargains only, and such bargains are not readily found. There are some money brokers who represent institutions directly who can offer such money, and they enjoy good business. It is curious that bank stocks are not generally regarded with favor as collateral in loans. Many banks do not want them. The market is limited and fluctuation is wide.

THE FOREIGN MARKETS.

Developments of Yesterday in London, Paris, and Berlin.

LONDON, April 11.—The discount rate of the Bank of England was reduced to-day from 5 to 4½ per cent., in accordance with expectations. The plethora of money in the market and the large influx of gold into the Bank of England during the past week had made the reduction a practical certainty.

Money was in plentiful demand and fair supply in the market to-day. Discounts were steady.

On the Stock Exchange the settlement was concluded satisfactorily, but operators and public alike were apathetic, and the business transacted was of small dimensions. The reduction of the Bank of England's rate of discount had already been discounted, while the favorable bank return failed to stimulate activity, as the London County Council's loan of $25,000,000 hung over the market. Gilt-edged securities, home rails, and foreigns developed an easy tendency. Japanese imperial sixes of 1904 closed at 101½.

Americans displayed strength during the forenoon, going up to well over parity on moderate bear covering and the anticipation of higher New York opening prices. These, however, came lower, and quotations here drooped to the lowest of the day, then hardened fractionally, and closed quietly steady at above the worst of the session.

Bullion amounting to £80,000 was taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 11; Lisbon, 3.

Bar silver steady, 30½d per ounce.

Money, 2¼@2¾ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 3⅝@3¾ per cent.; for three months' bills 3¾ per cent.

The weekly statement of the Bank of England shows the following changes:

Total reserve increased	£1,274,000
Circulation decreased	159,000
Bullion increased	1,115,931
Other securities decreased	1,720,000
Other deposits increased	4,518,000
Notes reserve increased	1,437,000

Government securities unchanged.

The proportion of the bank's reserve to liability this week is 43.55 per cent., as compared with 41.42 per cent. last week.

PARIS, April 11.—Prices on the Bourse to-day opened firm on the lowering of the Bank of England's rate of discount. A general rencion followed, and at the close trading was inactive. Russian imperial 4s were unquoted. Russian bonds of 1904 closed at 491.

The private rate of discount was 3 3-16 per cent.

Three per cent. rentes, 94f 60c for the account.

Exchange on London, 25f 24½c for checks.

The weekly statement of the Bank of France shows the following changes:

	Francs.
Notes in circulation decreased	115,225,000
Treasury deposits decreased	13,675,000
General deposits decreased	59,475,000
Gold in hand increased	2,700,000
Silver in hand increased	8,075,000
Bills discounted decreased	254,300,000
Advances increased	5,575,000

BERLIN, April 11.—Trading on the Boerse to-day was very quiet, while awaiting the action of the Bank of England in regard to its discount rate. Americans were dull, but Baltimore & Ohio and Canadian Pacific gained 1 point each upon local buying.

Exchange on London, 20 marks 50¼ pfennigs for checks.

Discount rates: Short bills, 3½ per cent.; three months' bills, 4¾ per cent.

IRON AND STEEL NOTES.

How the Floods Cut Down the Pittsburg Production of Pig Iron.

The falling off in the production of pig iron in the Pittsburg district as a result of the March floods is summarized as follows in The Iron Age:

The March product of the coke and anthracite blast furnaces was 2,228,175 tons, as compared with 2,045,068 tons in February, a short month, and 2,235,803 tons in the record month, December. While on the face of it this looks as though March had been larger than February, as a matter of fact, the daily rate of production in March was only 71,780 tons, as compared with that of 71,028 for February. This decline, due to floods and to the blowing out of furnaces, chiefly affected the steel works furnaces, the merchant furnaces having run along during the past three months at a practically uniform gait. The weekly capacity of the furnaces in blast on April 1 was 497,056 tons, as compared with 511,685 tons on March 1. This indicates a moderate falling off in the output during the current month.

The iron situation has improved greatly, according to local trade authorities, and buying for the year 1908 is thought to have begun well. There are inquiries in the market for more than 100,000 tons of foundry iron.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES

Sluggish Market, with Price Movement Confined to Narrow Limits.

COPPERS SELL DOWN

Cole-Ryan Stocks Lack Support in Sagging Market—Losses Confined to Fractions.

Curb stocks moved within narrow limits in a sluggish market yesterday, which left prices for the most part fractionally lower. In the industrial list Manhattan Transit was again moderately active, selling fractionally down from 5 to 4⅞. The close, after transactions of 8,000 shares, was at 4¾. Standard Oil started out buoyantly, going from 557 to 564 on the first few sales. Later the price dropped to 552, after transactions of 37 shares. Copper shares were weak, though declines were limited to fractions. The Cole-Ryan stocks fell off from ⅝ to 1⅛ on light trading. Greene-Cananea dropped from 16½ to 15⅞, but rallied to 16 at the close, after transactions of 2,500 shares. Greene Consolidated sold down from 24½ to 24 on some trading in odd lots, and Butte Coalition suffered a loss for the day of ⅝, closing after light selling at 26⅜. United Copper moved irregularly between 62½ and 63½. The close, after sales of 2,000 shares, was even with the opening, at 63.

PENNSYLVANIA CO.'S REPORT.

Balance Sheet Shows Securities of $277,000,000 on Company's Books.

The annual report of the Pennsylvania Company, the holding company for the Pennsylvania lines west of Pittsburg, and of the Pennsylvania Railroad itself, was issued yesterday, showing the earnings. SAYS EXAMINERS FEARED COPPER DEBT

Hodgens, ex-Cashier of Butte Bank, Tells More of His Relations with the Heinzes.

COPPERS OWED $1,800,000

Bank Examiner Worried About Conditions, He Declares, and Spoke to Bank Directors About Them.

The cross-examination of Thomas F. Hodgens, ex-cashier of the State Savings Bank of Butte, who is now engaged in suits with the Heinze interests, in an attempt to get access to the United Copper Company's books, was productive of a good many sharp clashes yesterday. The hearing was preliminary to the filing of affidavits in a suit in the Jersey courts. It is before Nicholas W. Bindsell of Newark as Commissioner.

F. Augustus Heinze and his brother, Arthur P. Heinze, came to the hearing yesterday. Counsel for the Heinzes are Sanford Robinson of Cary & Robinson and F. J. Faulks of Newark. William A. Lockwood and T. J. Walsh appear for Mr. Hodgens.

The activity of F. August Heinze in advising his counsel led to the first clash of the afternoon. Mr. Walsh of counsel to Mr. Hodgens finally asked whether Mr. Heinze's appearance among counsel for the respondent company should be noted.

"If you wish to make it appear that Mr. Heinze is conferring with his counsel," said Mr. Faulks, "I have no objection of having an entry made on the record."

"Oh," Mr. Walsh said, "so it appears that Mr. Heinze is a party to this proceeding, and that his personal counsel are here. I should like to know who they may be?"

Mr. Faulks answered that Mr. Heinze was there as President of the United Copper Company, and Mr. Walsh was satisfied to have his attendance noted in this capacity.

Mr. Hodgins's Examination.

Mr. Robinson and Mr. Faulks examined Mr. Hodgens not merely on matters related to the United Copper Company or touched upon in his direct examination, but upon all the varied charges and counterchargs involved in two pending suits quite distinct from the one in the New Jersey courts. Mr. Walsh protested frequently against encumbering the record with matter which, he said, was entirely foreign to the purposes of the action, finally declaring that the whole cross-examination was a "fishing expedition."

"And the purpose of this fishing expedition," continued Mr. Walsh, "to get testimony for use in other actions pending in the United States courts here, in which these partiea are litigants."

Mr. Faulks protested that he was bringing out the attitude of the petitioner toward the corporation he was suing. The Commissioner did not rule on the relevancy of the testimony.

One of the most interesting disclosures that has come out since the proceeding began followed a question by Mr. Robinson as to what basis Mr. Hodgens had for saying in his earlier testimony that the loans of the State Savings Bank to the Heinze companies last December amounted to $583,000. Mr. Hodgens replied that as the bank had continued down to that date to advertise him as among its Directors he had received in that month a confidential statement from one of the Bank Examiners of Montana which showed that F. Augustus Heinze and his associates and the companies in which he or they were interested were debtors to the bank to the extent of $1,800,000. It was this statement, said Mr. Modgens, which brought out the fact that the subsidiary companies of United Copper were indebted to the extent of $583,000, and the witness said that the Bank Examiner waa worried about the condition of things and had apoken to several of the Directors about it.

Earlier in the bearing Mr. Hodgens told how he came to get into the United Copper Company in May of 1902. He took 500 shares of the preferred stock, he said, on the original subscription, and got 470 shares of the preferred and 6,000 shares of the common in connection with the sale of his interest in the State Savings Bank to Mr. Heinze. There was much discussion between the witness and Mr. Robinson over the terms of the contract under which the sale was made, and as incidental to this the lawyer asked whether Mr. Heinze did not assert that Hodgena wasn't entitled to any of the United Copper stock in connection with the sale of the bank.

"I think he did," the witness answered. "That's a habit of Mr. Heinze's to keep from complying with the terms of that or any other contract."

Present Holding of Coppers.

F. A. Heinze said nothing. Mr. Robinson went further, asking about Mr. Hodgen's present holdinga of United Copper stock. The witness admitted that he had aome of it pledged as collateral at his bank.

"What's your bank?" demanded Mr. Robinson.

Mr. Hodgens refused to answer. So the lawyer asked him whether he had not got some bank stock back which Heinze had purchased under the diaputed contract. Hodgens said he had, and Mr. Lockwood wanted to know.

"I had to skirmish around to ge him to put up aome security," said Mr. Hodgens referring to F. A. Heinze." He owed the bank so much money that I had to get him to put up anything he had to protect the depositors."

Next Mr. Robinson wanted to know if the witness had not negotiated with John J. Ryan of the Amalgamated to aell him Heinze's notes at the bank.

"I might have talked to him avout it," was the reply. I had auch a strnenuous time becauae I had to carry Heine's notes at the bank.

I might have talked to him about it," was the reply. I had such a strenuous time becauae I had to carry Heinze's obligations that I may have talked about selling them to Mr. Ryan.

"Didn't you go to Mr. Heinze and threaten to sell his notes to Ryan and your own stock in the United Copper Company as well?"

"I don't think I said that," replied the witness. "But I may have said aomething about selling the notes, for before I would let the bank fail I would have sold his notes or anybody else's."

Mr. Hodgens explained that the difficulties in which the bank was then involved grew out of a run that waa in progress for two yeara, engineered against it because of its friendly relations to the Heinzes. The rest of the afternoon session was taken up with the testimony on collateral subjects, to which Mr. Walsh referred when he spoke of a "fishing expedition."

SUES CLIENT FOR SLANDER.

Lawyer Wants $10,000 Damages from Elinor M. Squier.

A suit for $10,000 damages for slander has been brought in the Supreme Court by Amos Edward Woodruff, a lawyer, at 111 Broadway, against Elinor M. Squier, a wealthy Philadelphian, now living in New York. The action came before Justice Blachoff yesterday on a motion to strike out parts of Woodruff's complaint as irrelevant and scandalous. This motion was denied.

The plaintiff alleges that the husband of the defendant died, leaving an estate worth more than $500,000. As he left no will only the defendant and her son, who is 17, were the only heirs. The plaintiff, who was a pall bearer at the funeral of the husband of Mrs. Squier, undertook to act as her attorney, although he knew, as he says, that it was a "most difficult and thankless position, as the defendant proposed and expected to act in a way not in accordance with the wishes of her dead husband's family."

The complaint alleges that for a long time Mrs. Squier was on the verge of open rupture with the members of her husband's family, and that Woodruff had to give most of his time and effort to "prevent such rupture and preserve an appearance of peaceful relations at least, which, in view of the strained relations existing, made his services very disagreeable." These statements and others the defendant sought to have eliminated from the complaint, but Justice Bischoff allowed them to stand.

Speaking to several persons she said of Woodruff's acting as pall bearer at her husband's funeral, according to Woodruff's allegation: "He carried the body to the grave one month and the next began to rob the widow." It was on this statement that the plaintiff brought his suit.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

No Countervailing Duties on British India Petroleum—Other Decisions.

In a decision by Eugenc d. Hay the Board of United States General Appraisers sustained yesterday a claim filed by F. A. Marsily & Co. and others of New York, it being held that Collector of Customs erred in exacting a countervailing duty on petroleum sent to this country from British India.

It is held that as England does not discriminate against American petroleum products no cause exists for exacting the extra duty upon the article produced in India.

I. F. Fischer wrote a decision for the Board overruling a protest filed by the International Forwarding Company of Chicago, it being held that calendars and blocks containing Scriptural texta are properly dutiable as lithographic prints at the rate of six cents per pound, although the Collector had assessed the merchandise at twenty-five per cent. as printed matter. As the importer failed to make the correct claim no relief can be granted.

FLAGMAN KILLED BY TRAIN.

Called by Children to the Track in Front of Electric Cars.

Special to The New York Times.

LAURELTON, L. I., April 11.—Frank Galting, a flagman of the Long Island Railroad, was instantly killed to-day by an electric train that passed his crossing at Catherine Street South. Galting was sitting in his flaghouee eating when the train, in charge of Motorman Hewlits, came along at the rate of forty miles an hour. Galting did not hear it, and kept on eating.

Two little girls on their way to school saw the train and called to the flagman. Galting rushed out on the track just as the train reached the crossing. He was thrown twenty feet and his head was cut off. The policemen could not find the children who had called to the flagman.

Ask the Farmers and the Market Gardeners of Long Island

Is there any money in buying acres? They are all rich.

On Tuesday, April 9th, we saw the parting snowstorm of a long and severe winter. We are actually at the dawn of spring, and from this hour we will find sunshine and the splendor of the green fields, the earth upturned everywhere to receive the seeds which decorate the fertile fields of Long Island. 150,000 people this spring will enjoy the comforts and pleasures of Suburban Life, suburban to New York, who were occupants of Flats and Apartment Houses a year ago. The great activity in Real Estate during the year 1906 induced them to either buy or rent in the suburbs, and before another year a greater number will emigrate. Electric car lines are building in every direction on Long Island; Rapid Transit Trains are increased, and the great reading, wage-earning public are bound to get out and breathe the air and enjoy the sunlight where life looks sweeter and homes more happy. Every paper published in Greater New York has repeatedly stated in its columns, "Long Island is the one and only place to live. The best channel to place your money."

The Real Estate Transfer of Greater New York Last Year Was One Billion of Dollars.

THE INVESTMENT ON LONG ISLAND WAS $600,000,000.

$250,000,000

WAS MADE BY THE MARKET GARDENER ON LONG ISLAND.
WAS MADE BY THE REAL ESTATE OPERATOR ON LONG ISLAND.
WAS MADE BY THE SMALL INVESTOR ON LONG ISLAND.

You Knew of It. Did You Invest? You Just Simply Looked On.

BELIEVE US, DEAR READERS, TO-DAY WE ARE ACTUALLY AT THE BEGINNING.

350,000 people dropped into New York last year. An equal amount will be ushered in this year. Some of them building, buying or renting. It means New York Surburban Real Estate will improve from 20 to 50 per cent before April 1st, 1908. Have you a desire to make money? Make it quick?

LET US LEAD YOU INTO DAYLIGHT, INTO THE PROMISED LAND OF PROSPERITY.

We do not ask you $500 to $1,000 a lot, or $1,000 to $2,500 per acre, but will during this sale, show you one-half acre plots (10 city lots) at a sum less than you can buy a lot in the suburbs for.

DECIDES FOR THE MOTHER.

Vice Chancellor Says Children Have No Right to Share in Business.

Vice Chancellor Garrison handed down a decision in Jersey City yesterday to the effect that a woman who carries on her husband's business after his death is entitled to the profits, and the children can only claim two-thirds of the estate as it stood at their father's death. Michael J. Tuite died in 1885, leaving a widow and four young children. His shop and business was worth about $1,000.

Mrs. Tuite, it was shown, had carried on the business, supporting herself and children, and had increased the value of the estate to about $10,000. In December last the children, who are all of legal age now, brought suit for a division of the estate, asserting that when their father died their mother had entered into a verbal agreement with them that they should be equal partners in the business. The Vice Chancellor said the statement that Mrs. Tuite had entered into a partnership agreement with four children so young as they were at their father's death was beyond belief. He decided that they were entitled to take two-thirds of the $1,000 their father's estate was worth when he died. If they wished to divide this amount between them he would give them ten days in which to make the necessary amendment to their bill.

SAY B.R.T. HOLDS UP SUBWAY TO CONEY

Brady, McCarren, and Woodruff Are Blamed for Blocking Right-of-Way Consents.

TRANSIT BOARD HEARS IT

"What's the Use?" Says Metz; "Brooklyn Has a Subway Lemon. That's Your Friend, Coler."

Anthony N. Brady of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, together with Senator Patrick H. McCarren, Republican State Chairman Timothy L. Woodruff, and E. C. Dohson, have successfully held up the building of the Coney Island subway by refusing to grant right-of-way consents to the Rapid Transit Commission, which planned the road and expected to advertise for bids for it within the year. As the matter stands at present there is no chance of any agreement being reached, and the road will not be bid for while the present commission holds office should the Public Utilities bill pass the Legislature.

The manner in which Mr. Brady held up the plan was made public yesterday at the meeting of the Rapid Transit Commission. Frank A. Hudson of the Bensonhurst and Coney Island Subway Association, an organization formed for the purpose of getting the authorities to build the road, addressed the meeting. He said that he and his associates had succeeded in getting consents all along the line with but little difficulty except on Stillwell Avenue. At this point they had encountered the Harway Improvement Company, and there had been a delay.

"The Harway Improvement Company," said Mr. Hudson, "is composed of Senator McCarren, Anthony N. Brady, Mr. Woodruff, and Mr. Dobson of The Brooklyn Eagle. I attended a meeting of these gentlemen the other day. All were present except Mr. Brady. We talked the matter over, and the three men said they saw no reason why the necessary consents should not be granted. Just as we had concluded the discussion amicably a side door opened and Mr. Brady walked in. He asked what we were talking about, and on being told said he would have to think the matter over.

"The next day I saw Mr. Dohson. He said that Mr. Brady had said the consent would be granted, but only on one condition. That was that it should be agreed that the Belmont people should never be allowed to extend their Subway lines in Brooklyn. The property is that on which the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company is at present dumping its ashes."

As soon as Mr. Hudson concluded, Mr. Boardman, of counsel, told the board that if Mr. Brady held out the board would have to go to the Appellate Division and have a commission appointed. The cost, he said, would be as much as if the board had not obtained any consents at all.

"What's the uso?" asked Mr. Metz. "We'll never get any bids for that line under the Elsberg bill. Why should we spend a lot of money on it?" Then to Mr. Hudson: "That's your good friend, Mr. Coler. He's the man who held up the Fourth Avenue Subway a little while ago. He's a great friend of the people of Brooklyn, he is. Belmont told me, before the Elsberg bill was passed, that he would build the Fourth Avenue line with his own money. You can't get bids on the line now from any one. It's a matter of dollars and cents."

Mr. Hudson, seeing the trend of the talk, asked if the board was going to stand still and let a man like Mr. Brady thwart its plans.

"I tell you we can't get bidders," said Mr. Metz.

"I've heard of plenty of men willing to build."

"Heard it from Coler," said Mr. Metz. "He had Mr. Carnegie going to build the Fourth Avenue line one day, and the next day he woke up and found out that Mr. Carnegie had never heard of it. Then he had Kuhn, Loeb & Co., but they never even thought of such a thing. I tell you, Brooklyn has a lemon, as far as Subways go, and the sooner we realize it the better."

The matter was finally referred to the Committee on Plans, which may try to conciliate Mr. Brady. There was every indication, however, that the board considers it impossible to surmount the obstacle raised by the B. R. T. interests.

SUBWAY LOOP BIDS RECEIVED.

Nearly $1,000,000 Difference in Estimates on One Section.

The two bids submitted for the construction of the first and most important section of the Subway loop between the East River bridges, that in Centre Street, between Pearl and Canal, were opened by the Rapid Transit Commission yesterday. The bidders were the Degnon Company and the Cranford Contracting Company of Brooklyn, whose bids were as follows:

Degnon Company, tunnel	$2,952,000
Degnon Company, pipe galleries	83,000
Cranford Company, tunnel	3,775,000
Cranford Company, pipe galleries	50,000

The difference between the two bids was a surprise. The Degnon Company built that portion of the present Subway which runs through very nearly the same territory and is now building the Belmont tunnel under the East River. The board will award the contract next Thursday.

The bids were higher than the preliminary estimate of Chief Engineer Rice, who had figured that the entire loop would cost about $15,000,000, of which $6,000,000 would be used in Manhattan. For the section bid on yesterday Mr. Rice's estimate was $2,600,000.

The work must be finished in twenty months, and a bond of $300,000 is required. The other sections will be let as soon as possible.

Mr. Rice submitted to the board a plan for accelerating the movement of Subway trains by separating the crowds leaving from the crowds entering the stations. He suggested that, as an experiment, railings should be put up on the platforms at the Grand Central Station four and a half feet from the edge. Gates will hold the passengers back at the point of entrance to the cars until those leaving have passed along the walk inside the railings to a point opposite the middle of the car, where there will be an exit gate. The plan was sent to Mr. Shonts of the Interborough.

After considerable discussion the board decided to authorise counsel to oppose the Saxe Senate bill, making it compulsory for the board to advertise three months for bidders on new subways instead of three weeks. The bill is intended to stop the present board from letting any more contracts. Mr. Boardman said that this would be injurious to public interest, as it would delay the work. Mayor McClellan said he supposed the bill would come to him for signature, and announced his intention of opposing it.

The board was informed that owing to delays in the Corporation Counsel's office, over details, the property owners along Park Avenue, who were recently awarded damages in $284,000 by the court, were threatening to have the old suit dismissed and a new one started in the hope of obtaining more money. The board will send a letter to Mr. Ellison, asking him to hurry the proceedings.

NURSE LOSES DAMAGE SUIT.

Jury Finds for Henry Bergh, Defendant, in Action to Recover $3,000.

The jury in the Supreme Conrt in Brooklyn before whom the action of Miss Susan Rooney, a trained nurse, who sued to recover $3,000 damages from Henry Bergh, Treasurer and Director of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, for alleged assault, was tried, brought in a verdict yesterday afternoon for the defendant.

The nurse charged Mr. Bergh with dragging her downstairs and swearing at her. The defendant said he simply put her out of the house when she annoyed his wife, who was ill.

BELMONT DECRIES SHORT FRANCHISES

All Well in Theory, Says He, but the Business Man Wants Something Stable.

THINKS CRITICISM SCARES

Metz Repeats That Belmont Ought to Have a Monument for Building the Subway.

August Belmont, Controller Herman A. Metz, ex-Lieut. Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff, A. L. Langdon, traffic manager of the Long Island Railroad Company, and several other men interested in traffic and the development of Long Island, delivered addresses last night at the first dinner of the Queens Borough Real Estate Exchange, held in the Hotel Manhattan. Controller Metz repeated his assertion that Mr. Belmont should have a monument built for him, and added:

"The time is coming when we will cease to hound the corporations. Instead we are going to knock at their gates and beg them for God's sake to lay some tracks for us. While we are talking about how much the railroads are getting we are unable to get to our homes. While we are discussing the need of fresh air and parks for the masses we cannot get across the bridges to Brooklyn and the rest of Long Island."

Mr. Metz said that Mr. Belmont deserved the monument "for taking a chance and building the Subway for us when no one else could see anything in the proposition."

Belmont Regrets Criticism.

Mr. Belmont in his speech said in part:

"Unfortunately there is a spirit of criticism against corporations prevalent. It would not be proper or becoming for me to criticise this spirit, but I know that this hostile spirit frightens the investor, and the moment hostility is started the corporations find it difficult to get capital with which to make improvements or additions.

"Conditions confronting us are not now what they used to be, and corporations find it difficult to get along in any community. They are threatened with regulation of all sorts. The regulation may be proper or it may be improper, but the threat militates against enterprise."

"If this condition prevailed when the Subway was first contemplated, I very much doubt if any corporation would have undertaken the great task of building it. I repeat that conditions are not attractive to capital. Short franchises are very well in theory, but when a man is going into business he wants something with safety or stability and definiteness. He does not want either to build up a business or buy it, if at the end of twenty-five years or less he finds that it has no value. I do not believe that the city is any better off for giving short-term franchises than it was when long-term franchises were given.

Suburban Extension Menaced.

Frank Bailey of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company of Brooklyn also decried the regulation of railroads. He declared that it would menace the expansion of the interests of places like Long Island, and added that the legitimate extension of railroads on which the suburban towns depended would cease unless this doctrine was no longer preached. This he said would happen "unless the administration of the country shall continue along the line so that we shall have but one party and but one men in that party."

A. L. Langdon said: "The air is full of complaints about railroads. There is talk of unjust discrimination and rebates on freight business; not from shippers or any one that does much business with railroads. Those who do talk are surprisingly vehement in their denunciations of rebates, and yet I dare say that giving a rebate was not essentially wrong until the law made it so.

"During the experimental stages of a great many kinds of business, so long as it was offered equally to all persons affected by it, it was a fair and reasonable way to make reduced rates for large and certain shipments, which could not be made for small and uncertain shipments.

"Nobody disputes that transportation rates should be the same for all persons under the same circumstances and conditions and I believe it is a long time since there has been any general disposition on the part of railroad officers to discriminate in favor of or against any persons. There may have been isolated cases, but there are occasional violations of the law by individuals of all the laws. Any one can now get attention cheaply by shouting that he is for the enforcement of more restrictive legislation for the railroads."

Safety on the Long Island Railroad.

Mr. Langdon called attention to an editorial recently printed in THE NEW YORK TIMES on the subject of railroad accidents, in which attention was directed to a Western railroad which for ten years has not caused the death of one passenger, although it carried 145,000,000 passengers to the mile last year. He declared that the record of the Long Island Railroad in this respect had been neglected.

"The Long Island Railroad," he said, "operates out of Long Island City alone 140 steam trains in Winter and over 200 in Summer, and the same number inbound every day. It has only 392 miles of road and many public grade crossings much used by vehicles and pedestrians. The Long Island Railroad, with less than half the mileage and nearly three times as many passengers as the Delaware & Hudson Company, and with less than one-fourth the mileage, carries seven times as many passengers as the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railroad, and the Long Island Railroad has not killed one passenger in fourteen years."

To Build Warehouses in Newark.

Plans for three big warehouses, to be erected by the Carnegie Steel Company, were filed yesterday with the Newark Building Department. It is estimated that the buildings will cover 16,000 square feet. There will be a power house, general warehouse, and bar warehouse. The cost has been estimated at $250,000.

CHARGES POLICE OPPRESSION

Real Estate Man's Complaint Against Capt. O'Reilly Withdrawn.

Capt. Miles O'Reilly of the Mercer Street Station was summoned to Jefferson Market Court yesterday, charged with oppression by John W. Cullen, a real estate agent, of 271 Broadway, lessee of the building at 34 West Third Street, which was raided by the police in 1906. A suit for $10,000 is still pending against Acting Captain Bonrke, formerly in command of the Mercer Street Station for the raid.

Louis H. Reynolds, counsel for Mr. Cullen, told Magistrate Whitmen that Capt. O'Reilly, five policemen, and a plain clothes man entered the building yesterday and searched it on the plea that they were looking for gamblers and gambling material. Cullen had a place in Dey Street, which he sold to the McAdoo Tunnel Company, and some merchandise in storage there he sent to the West Third Street building for storage. While the driver was unloading, Capt. O'Reilly appeared, and demanded to know who was moving in.

"Now, Capt. O'Reilly is honest—there is no doubt about that," said the lawyer, "but I think he had been misinformed by some of his men. I asked the Captain to go away, but instead I found him making his search of the place by opening a case of goods. Now, as there was nothing in violation of the law, I think the Captain violated Section 556 of the Penal Code relating to oppression."

Magistrate Whitmen told Capt. O'Reilly that he had a right to go into the place when he found it open, but when he was convinced that the place was being used as a reputable business building he should have gone away and taken his men with him. He ordered the Captain not to annoy the tenants. The Captain smiled, apologized to the lawyer, and the latter said he would withdraw his complaint.

Promptly at 9 o'clock yesterday morning the first Subscription Wholesale Tailoring opened at the Hope Corner. Among the first to be measured were prominent downtown lawyers and brokers. At 9:45 the Chambers St. Annex, which has been converted into an elaborate Tailoring establishment, was crowded to fullest capacity.

There are many novel features: Before any measurements are taken, the customer is weighed, his height taken and other details unusual in tailoring.

The variety of cloths is astonishing. Spring Suitings, Summer Suitings, in Serges and Worsteds, Homespuns and Tweeds. The new brownish stuffs

All Are $14.10

No matter what the height or weight of the customer, there are no extra charges.

A most remarkable showing is the Prince Albert, Tuxedo and Full Dress Coat and vestings, also $14.10. Livery and Chauffeur suitings as well as Uniforms for owners and officers of yachts, Uniforms for Hotels and Institutions the same universal price, $14.10, and if a customer is not more than satisfied, the clothes will not be delivered to him.

The Trouserings made to measure at $4.40 are no less astonishing than the other fabrics. During the afternoon hours the newly launched Tailor Shop was running along with a "full house."

The Subscription opened yesterday at 9 A. M. and closes next Thursday at 6 P. M.

This Is the Second Day

Many of the choicest fabrics are Ends of 3¾ to 10 yards; it would be well to "get there" as early as convenient, as there are no reserves nor duplicates.

The entire frontage of the Stewart Building, from the main entrance on Broadway, around on Chambers St. to Ridley's Candy Store, is one great tailoring exposition of fabrics, models and other demonstrations. Even if you are not interested in new clothes you should see this display.

IN THE JURY ROOM BY JUROR NO. 6

Story of the Long and Fruitless Session Told by One Who Took Part in It.

THEY BEGAN WITH PRAYER

And Strove Earnestly and Conscientiously to Reach a Verdict.

ONE WON FOR ACQUITTAL

But that Was the Only Change After the First Real Line-up.

EVIDENCE THAT COUNTED

Wife's Story and "Dementia Americana" Plea Figured Very Little in the Result.

BY HARRY C. BREARLEY, Juror No. 6.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

The members of the jury were greatly surprised when at the close of Mr. Jerome's summing up on Wednesday afternoon the Judge announced his intention of immediately charging the jury upon the law points. It had been generally supposed that if the case closed by the middle of the afternoon a recess would be taken until the following morning, for the jurors were all wearied by the close attention given to the long and detailed summing up; most of them had lost sleep through consideration given to the facts of the case, and a sense of the solemn responsibility soon to devolve upon them, and they had hoped to be able to begin their real labors in the refreshed condition of a morning session. However, they straightened up in their chairs and fixed their gaze upon the dignified Justice as he read with great impressiveness his luminous charge.

At 5:20 o'clock the jurors were excused to go into the jury room, and marched through the immense crowd to the rear door. The prisoner and his wife, both of whom showed evidence of the strain under which they had been long laboring, fixed anxious glances upon them as they passed.

The events of the next forty-seven hours must be considered as in some sense sacred, and the writer has no wish to violate any of the proprieties. It is manifest that every juror has a proprietorship in his own personality, hence the writer considers it necessary to omit all names, as well as any indications of the identity of the different members. The fact, however, that there was some little discussion in regard to the confidence which must be observed and that its limitations were somewhat clearly defined by mutual agreement, gives a certain latitude for discussing the general features of the succeeding forty-seven hours.

If any further warrant were needed, the fact that this case is in every way a public matter, and that the public has a distinct right to a knowledge of how certain general classes of evidence are regarded by jury, makes it to some degree a public duty to throw a degree of light upon the proceedings.

Deliberations Began With Prayer.

It can be distinctly stated that the jury walked to their room with a deeply solemn sense of responsibility to render a careful, deliberate, fair-minded, and thoroughly conscientious verdict. By unanimous impulse the first action was to gather about the long table in the centre of the room and stand with bowed heads while an opening prayer was made. Then, with the Foreman in his chair at the head of the table and the other jurors in the places to which they were accustomed at meal times, parliamentary rules were adopted, and the formal discussion was under way.

Upon motion an initial ballot was taken preceding all argument. This ballot occurred at 5:30 o'clock, ten minutes after the jury entered the room, and revealed six votes for conviction of murder in the first degree, two votes for manslaughter in the first degree, and four for acquittal upon the ground of insanity. The two manslaughter ballots were immediately changed to murder in the first degree, the respective jurors explaining that they had so voted, not from any doubt of the completeness of the People's case as charged in the indictment, but to suggest a possible basis for an ultimate compromise ballot should such ultimately prove to be necessary.

The line-up then stood eight for murder in the first degree to four for acquittal upon the ground of insanity. Argument then began with the seriousness and almost the formality of a Congressional debate. The jurors very generally respected the rights of the speaker to an uninterrupted privilege of address after recognition by Mr. Smith. Thus was secured early freedom from any long wrangling.

"Unwritten Law" Ignored.

One of the first things developed was the completeness with which the covert but perfectly obvious defense of the "unwritten law"—so conspicuous in Mr. Del-

WOMEN'S POKER GAME RAIDED

Police Drop In on a Party Playing Just Like Men.

The police of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station raided last night a poker game for women in a boarding house in Seventh Avenue near Thirty-ninth Street, arresting four expensively dressed women, who wore diamonds and smoked cigarettes and drank whisky while they played. The police acted on information given by a woman whose friend had lost $90 in the house, so the friend said.

About 11 o'clock Detectives Carretti, Devany, and Moran went to the house and rang the bell. Jean Galon, the doorman, let the three detectives in. They said they wanted to rent rooms and board at the house. Jean showed Devany about the rooms, and Moran and Carretti went upstairs quietly to a room in the rear on the first floor, which had previously been described for them and managed to secrete themselves behind some portieres.

As they stepped out a man who was sitting with the women around a card table made a dive headforemost out of a back window and disappeared. The police didn't bother going after him, as there was no fire escape to walk down, and the man got over a fence before the policeman got a look out of the window. The women were hysterical. They insisted they were doing nothing wrong, that it was just a friendly little game, no violation of any law, or anything like that.

The women provided the list of names and addresses. Mme. Jane Favré, housekeeper, who keeps the boarding house; Miss Mamie Martine of 528 Seventh Avenue; Miss Marie Clark of 4 West Thirtieth Street; Mrs. Jane Wilson, a widow, of 175 West Eighty-fifth Street.

Mrs. Wilson did all the talking for the party. The others wept. Mrs. Wilson asked to use a telephone in the house, and begged the detectives to go far enough away so that they couldn't hear the number she wished to call. The detectives were obliging enough to do this.

When the party walked to the station they found a hansom cab there ahead of them, and a tall, well-groomed man of middle age waiting for the party.

Besides 500 chips, used for poker, the police got three dozen packs of playing cards, and a book containing names with the entries, "won" and "lost" after the names entered and in front of figures.

At 1:30 o'clock an attorney called at the station with a bail bond signed by Magistrate Sweetser, calling for the release of one of the party. Abraham Harinish went on the bond in $1,000, giving a house at 888 Tenth Avenue as equity. It was explained that the rest would be released later.

ICEBERG 300 FEET HIGH.

Sighted Off Banks by the Vaderland—Passenger with $3,700 Disappears.

Four large icebergs, one of them resembling a church in general appearance, with a lofty, steeplelike pinnacle towering 300 feet above the sea, were sighted off the Banks by the Red Star liner Vaderland, which got in yesterday from Antwerp.

While the vessel was anchored off Sandy Hook on Thursday night George Boehme, a second-cabin passenger, disappeared. The man was seen shortly before midnight. He roomed with two other passengers, and it was their inquiries that started the search for him. He was not found. Boehme was 22 years old, and a native of Berlin. He was coming here, it was said, to visit an uncle in Brooklyn. With him he had $3,700 in German money.

The search for him was maintained until the vessel reached her dock. According to a story told on board, a musician on the Vaderland declared that he had seen a longshoremen go ashore who looked very much like the missing man.

Capt. Blaikie of the Anchor liner Furnessia, which arrived from Glasgow, reported that on last Wednesday James Paton of Glasgow, a second-cabin passenger, became so violently insane that it was necessary to put him in a strait jacket. The unfortunate man labored under the delusion that policemen were following him.

He struggled and raved all day on Wednesday, and that night he died of exhaustion. The body was buried at sea.

SEIZES CHILDREN IN COURT.

Mrs. Irwin's Brothers Hold Husband While She Gets Them Away in a Cab.

The orderly proceedings of the Special Term of the Supreme Court in Brooklyn were upset yesterday when Justice Thomas awarded to Mrs. Jeannette Thompson Irwin of 284 Clinton Street, whose husband, Edward Wilbur Irwin, an electrical engineer, is suing her for divorce, the custody of her two children, a boy 2 years old, and a girl 4 years old, for whom she had detectives searching for six months.

As soon as Justice Thomas granted the request of Martin W. Littleton, Mrs. Irwin's counsel, that the children be turned over to her, Mrs. Irwin jumped from her seat in the rear of the courtroom and rushed over to her children, who were seated with a nurse near the counsel's table. Seizing the children in her arms and covering their faces with kisses, she started on a run for the corridor.

As Justice Thomas had not announced how long the mother was to retain possession of her children, Mr. Irwin ran after his wife and prevented her from leaving the Court House.

Fearing the children were to be taken from her again, Mrs. Irwin burst into tears. Two of her brothers who were in court with her grappled with the husband, allowing Mrs. Irwin and the children to reach a carriage which was waiting for her.

Court officers separated Irwin and his wife's two brothers. It developed that the court's ruling was that the mother should have the custody of the children only until to-day. She will then be obliged to turn them over to Irwin.

DOWNTOWN BUILDING BURNED

Office Structure at 31 Vesey Street Destroyed Early This Morning.

Fire started in the five-story double building at 31 Vesey Street, at the southwest corner of Church and Vesey Streets at an early hour this morning. The building was destroyed. Flames had burnt through the roof before the blaze was discovered, and the fire had evidently been burning a long time. The ground floor of the building is occupied by the Great American Tea Company.

The fire apparently started on the two upper floors, which are occupied by the New York Silicate Book Company. The workmen in the Hudson River tunnel terminal nearby discovered the blaze, and turned in the alarm. The sixth Avenue elevated trains were blocked and the St. Pauls' vestry house across Church Street, from the fire was in danger for a time. There was no one in the building when the fire started.

H. H. ROGERS'S TALK STIRS WASHINGTON

Roosevelt's Friends Find Evidence of the "Rich Men's Conspiracy."

TO RALLY ROUND TAFT NOW

Defenders of the President's Policies Declare Financial Interests May Turn to the Democrats.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 12.—The first of the promised developments in the "rich men's conspiracy" came to-day in the shape of comment on the interview of H. H. Rogers published in THE NEW YORK TIMES this morning. This interview attracted prompt attention at the White House, where it received a thoughtful perusal, as a result of which it may be said that the President is now more than ever likely to use every effort to promote the candidacy of Secretary Taft for the Presidency. It need surprise no one if he should decide to send Taft into Ohio to make a personal campaign.

The President had few callers to-day and none of them would admit that he had talked with him about Mr. Rogers's demand for "the strongest conservatism in the conduct of the Government." It was pointed out by a close friend of the President, however, that that part of Rogers's talk was an indisputable evidence of the existence of the conspiracy to defeat the continuance of the Roosevelt policies, and to secure the election of a "reactionary" to the Presidency next year.

Friends of Secretary Taft's candidacy here have called attention to-day to the coincidence of the Foraker speech and the Rogers interview. This coincidence is accepted by them as evidence of an understanding among the representatives of the financial interests to co-operate for control of the Presidential nominations next year. It is pointed out that it is the intention of the rich conspirators to prevent the nomination of a man of the Roosevelt type by the Republicans, if they can.

If they cannot they will turn their attention to the Democrats and do what they can there to get a man named whom they can help to defeat the Republican nominee. It is charged here that in 1904 the Standard Oil interests hostile to Roosevelt were prepared to go to the assistance of Judge Parker, but did not get into the fight to the limit of their ability because they discovered soon after the opening of the campaign that the election of Parker was an impossibility.

The part of the Rogers talk yesterday which has attracted attention and excited suspicion among the President's friends here is this:

> The people must see that settled conditions are necessary for progress and development, and I believe that the sentiment of the country will have so crystallized within a few months that there will be a practically united demand for the strongest conservatism in the conduct of the Government. We must have settled conditions, and I believe we will have them.

It is pointed out by the friends of the President, who accept at part the conspiracy story, that the "settled conditions" to which Mr. Rogers refers are not what the followers of the President understand by that term, but freedom from prosecution for violations of the anti-trust laws, tariff stand-patism, and non-interference with railroad rebating and discrimination.

The prompt manner in which this talk by Mr. Rogers is taken up by the friends of the President and cited as an evidence of the alleged conspiracy, was pointed out to-day as an indication of the lack of political skill of the Standard Oil man. It recalled the same interview he gave out in Minneapolis last fall against Hearst a short time before the Gubernatorial election in New York. Hearst promptly placarded the interview throughout the State to show how he stood with Rogers. Now the friends of the President are following the Hearst tactics and pointing to this new utterance of Rogers as proof that he is in the rich men's conspiracy.

NO CROWD GREETS FORAKER.

Senator Slips Into Cincinnati, His Home Town, Almost Unobserved.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, April 12.—Senator Foraker arrived at home to-day to look after his political fences—fences which, according to current reports, are all awry and generally in need of repairs.

The Senator seemed astonished that even the couple of newspaper men who met him at the station knew of the exact hour of his coming. He had apparently tried to avoid the attention of the public on the occasion of his entrance into his formerly enthusiastic home city, but which is said now to have been turned into an enemies' camp. He declined to be drawn out on politics.

"Just say that I am home for the first time in many months and that I will attend to my own private business. I shall in the meantime give such attention to political matters as the situation seems to warrant," he declared.

Senator Foraker will return to Washington to take up the Brownsville investigation on May 14, which will give him just one month in which to do business in Cincinnati.

When George B. Cox, the erstwhile boss of this county, who was deposed through the Taft speech at Akron, was asked to-night if he had been in conference with Senator Foraker or called to such a conference, his reply was: "I decline to answer."

A recognized authority among the Taft followers said to-day:

"Senator Foraker is now here to see and know for himself. He will soon see and know. Apparently he has so far entirely misunderstood the situation here. He cannot much longer be blinded to the fact that this region is almost unanimous for Taft."

WISCONSIN FOR ROOSEVELT.

Sandborn Says Wall Street Men Cannot be Considered.

Special to The New York Times.

MILWAUKEE, April 12.—The sentiment of Wisconsin as a State is overwhelmingly for Roosevelt in 1908, according to Senator A. W. Sandborn, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee and Republican leader in the Senate.

"The Republicans of this State," said the Senator, "feel almost to a man that it must be Roosevelt or a man like him, so far removed from Wall Street and all its influences as to be absolutely above suspicion of such connections, now or in the past. I believe, for this reason, that men like Secretary Root, brilliant though he is, are out of the question. The Harriman incident has intensified this feeling."

This is a sample of the interviews given by leading legislators to-day.

CATS ANNOY YALE MEN.

Students Shoot at Them, Are Arrested—Mayor Sympathetic.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, April 12.—Earle A. Coyne of New Britain, Conn., a Yale freshman, and John Baird, a sophomore, told the Police Court officials to-day that cats were ruining their university career. The two students room at 47 Lake Place. They had been arrested for opening rifle fire on an evening reunion of old college cats on Saturday last and were arraigned for discharging firearms within the city limits without a permit.

It happened that the shot missed the cats but whizzed past the ear of a neighbor, Warren B. Ayres, who called Policeman Reilly and caused the arrests.

The rifle and a supply of "pepper" shot lay on the table as damaging evidence, but the accused students told such a pitiful tale of disturbed studies and interrupted sleep because of the vocal efforts of the cats that Judge Methewson was touched.

"We haven't been able to study, to think, or to sleep in peace on account of the cats in the neighborhood," testified Coyne. "They gather on the back fence by the dozen during the day and join in concerts that last until night, and then they adjourn to the front of the house and do a sextet song and dance there.

"It simply got so that a fellow couldn't study, and we thought that the best thing to do would be to pepper them with a few shots and drive them away for good."

The students, both of whom are working their way through college, were fined $1. The Judge remitted the costs of $4, and gave them until the last of the month to pay the fine. Acting on the Judge's suggestion, they applied to Chief of Police Wrenn for a permit to renew the war on the cats, but the Chief told them that so far as he was concerned they could go ahead and "Shoot away," but referred them to the Mayor for a permit.

They hustled to Mayor Studley's office, gun in hand, and again told their troubles, and, while the Mayor also offered his sympathy, he refrained from furnishing a permit in the fear that such steps would result in a general rush for cat-killing licenses.

CATS CAUSE OF HER SUICIDE.

Old Woman Kills Herself Rather Than Lose a Score of Pets.

ELIZABETH, N. J., April 12.—Because the steady increase of rents in this city had finally come to mean that she must be separated from her pet cats, Catherine Dowd, 65 years old, widow of Matthew Dowd, who died some years ago, threw herself under a trolley car to-night. She was cut to pieces. The car was raised on jacks to extricate her body.

For years Mrs. Dowd had lived in a dilapidated house at 21 East Scott Place. William Schwarz, the owner, told her recently he would on the 1st of May have to have more rent than she was paying. She replied she could not pay the increase. She then set about obtaining a new home and a couple of days ago hired an apartment. There was one condition on which the renting was based and that was that she should not have in the apartment at any time more than one cat.

She finally consented to this, but later repented. She had for years given shelter to all the stray cats that came along, and sacrificed herself and her comfort even in the matter of food for the sake of the cats. Of late she had had but sixteen, but usually a score was a small population of felines for her home to contain.

Talking with neighbors this afternoon she said she could not give up her pets, and declared life was not worth living without them.

ORDER PASTOR HUNT OUT.

Co-respondent in Bassett Case Agrees to Move in Three Days.

After its regular weekly prayer meeting last night, the Noble Street Presbyterian Church in Williamsburg discussed the question of what they should do about the occupation of the parsonage by the Rev. E. Lawrence Hunt, the Church's deposed pastor. Mr. Hunt was mentioned as co-respondent in the divorce proceedings recently brought by Charles C. Bassett in Washington, and after the divorce was obtained married Mrs. Bassett.

A committee was appointed last night to wait immediately upon Mr. Hunt and tell him that it was the church's desire that he vacate forthwith. The people waited in the church for the committee to report.

The new Mrs. Hunt opened the parsonage door when the committee rang the bell.

"Walk in, gentlemen," she said, cordially, showing them into the library, where Mr. Hunt sat.

The committee was nonpluesed for a while, but finally conveyed its message and asked Mr. Hunt what he was going to do about it.

For answer he wrote the following:

"To the officers and members of the church:

"I want to say, after considering with your committee, that I very much regret the adverse criticism that my action has aroused. And my desire to allay it is such that I will vacate the parsonage in three days.

"I intended, in any event, to vacate the premises in a short time, but since the church has expressed its desires I will heed them immediately. I want to express my grateful feeling for all the kindnesses that the church has extended to me. In justice to all, I ought to add that I was overwhelmed with the conviction that my action was the crowning proof of Christian manhood and that I am unable to see the matter from the point of view that you see it from."

The committee reported to the meeting, and, though there were many who advocated more drastic steps, it was finally agreed to let Mr. Hunt have the three days to move in that he had requested.

DOG BLOCKED SUBWAY.

Short Circuit Also Started a Fire in Harlem River Tube.

The short-circuiting of a feed wire in the Subway at the Bronx end of the tunnel under the Harlem River set fire to the wood covering the third rail and tied up traffic for twenty minutes last night. The smoke gathered in the tube at the Mott Avenue Station in such volume that when traffic again got under way the trains had to run past the station for a time. The Subway employes put out the fire by the use of sand.

There was another tie-up in the Subway last night. About 11 o'clock a fox terrier got on the uptown tracks at the 116th Street Station. He was chased to 125th Street before he was caught. In the meantime about five trains were blocked for about a quarter of an hour.

HEIRESS MARRIES EX-WINE CHECKER

Miss Meyer's Marriage to "Count" Ferouli Surprises Her Friends.

WORKED AT THE WALDORF

And Ferouli Was Recognized by Waiters When He Took His Bride to Dine at the Hotel.

After a brief courtship, Miss Ioma Meyer, heiress to an estate of several hundred thousand dollars, has announced her marriage to "Count" Ferouli, a former wine check clerk at the Waldorf-Astoria, but more recently a teacher of Italian and French. The wedding was such a quiet one that none of the bride's friends knew of her intention until she announced the fact to the manager of the Marie Antoinette Hotel, where for several years she has lived.

"We were quietly married a few days ago," Mrs. Ferouli said last night, but when asked for further particulars she said that was all she cared to say about it.

She is not living with the "Count," however. He calls upon her every day and sometimes he dines with her. What their plans are she will not tell because she says she does not care to discuss the wedding.

Ferouli is known only as the "Count" to the manager and to the attendants at the Marie Antoinette.

At the Waldorf-Astoria, where for two years he was employed as check clerk, it was the same. "Count" he was called by all who knew him there. It was his appearance which gave him the "title." His big black mustache and foreign accent gave him a distinguished air. His dress is immaculate.

Just how he met his wife is not known by those at the Marie Antoinette. Early in the Winter he began to call at the hotel to see her. His calls became more frequent, and they were seen much together at the theatre and in restaurants. One night about two weeks ago they entered the dining room of the Waldorf-Astoria. Several of the waiters recognized him as they former fellow-employe. He nodded genially in response to the nod of recognition by the head waiter, and calling him over, said:

"We want the something grand tonight. The best in the house." And he got it. When the meal was over there was a generous tip to the waiter who had served them. There was gossip among the old waiters when the Count and his companion left. "Seems to have struck it rich," was the comment of one with whom the Count had served in the old days. If there was jealousy, none was expressed in words.

Ferouli came to New York from Italy about eight years ago. His family is said to be a good one, and he came to America to seek his fortune. After his work at the Waldorf he began to teach Italian and French and studied English at the same time. He also speaks German. His mastery of the English language is thorough now, although he retains the foreign accent.

Miss Meyer is a daughter of the late Isaac Meyer, a manufacturer who made a fortune in this city and died several years ago. Her mother died two years ago. The country home of the Meyers was at White Hall, N. Y. Miss Meyer also has a cottage at Saratoga, and goes there in the Summer.

When she went to live at the Marie Antoinette she was accompanied by a woman companion, a matron, who acted as her chaperone. Miss Meyer has no confidantes in the hotel. She is naturally uncommunicative. But the manager was surprised when she told him that she had been married to the handsome Italian. The manager is an old friend of the Meyer family.

MAMMOTH FOUND IN GLACIER.

May Figure at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition.

Special to The New York Times.

TACOMA, Washington, April 12.—A mammoth, one of the giant elephants that roamed North America thousands of years ago, probably will be one of the exhibits at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition. It will be brought down from its present resting place in the pristine blue ice of an Alaskan glacier, left here during the Alaskan fair and then taken to a large Eastern museum.

The body of the pre-historic monster was discovered some time ago, and the fair officials were advised of the find. Investigation showed that to finance the undertaking of bringing it to the Sound about $25,000 would be required. It will first have to be cut out of the ice, transported to navigable water, brought down the river to the ocean, and then transferred to an ocean steamship. It was suggested that some of the larger Eastern scientific institutions would be glad to undertake the project, and the indications are that it may be carried through by the American Museum of Natural History of New York.

The mammoth's carcas is intact in the ice, where it has rested for thousands of years.

WARRANTS FOR R. M. CROW.

Man Who Shot Himself in Theatre Accused of Passing Bad Checks.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 12.—It was fear of arrest that caused Robert M. Crow, nephew of H. C. McEldowney, President of the Union Trust Company, the H. C. Frick bank here, to attempt suicide by shooting at the Grand Opera House matinée on Wednesday.

At the Homeopathic Hospital it was said to-night that the young man would probably recover. Detectives who hold two warrants for Crow's arrest are keeping informed of his condition. The charges against Crow were made by W. S. Smith, a druggist of Homewood and Frankstown Avenues, who alleges that Crow induced him to cash worthless checks aggregating $350.

After the attempt of Crow to end his life his relatives declared that the young man had been driven insane by reading too much about the trial of his friend, Harry K. Thaw. It is now learned that Crow had been playing the stock market pretty hard. In a letter which Crow sent his wife before attempting his life, he told her to settle with Smith out of the money which she would realize on his life insurance.

McCARREN GAINS RECRUITS.

Former Opponents in Democratic Party Join McCarren Clubs.

Ex-Park Commissioner Elijah R. Kennedy of Brooklyn was elected to membership in the Kings County Democratic Club, the head McCarren club of Brooklyn, last night. His name was proposed by Controller Metz, and it was placed on the rolls without discussion.

This action was of peculiar political interest in Brooklyn because Kennedy was one of the leaders of the Democratic faction, of which the late ex-Senator Michael J. Coffey was the head. This faction was violently opposed to McCarren's leadership in the county.

Senator Coffey died several weeks ago, and it is believed that Mr. Kennedy's joining a McCarren organization means that the old Democrats who long have been opposed to McCarren, are drifting apart and gradually may get into the McCarren ranks.

A week ago Borough President Coler became a member of the Madison Club, the McCarren Club of the Eighteenth Assembly District. He was not a Coffey man, but was anti-McCarren.

CHICAGO RAILWAY PLANS.

First Steps Taken to Rehabilitate the Street Car System.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 12.—Formal acceptance by Chicago City Railway Directors of the street car ordinances approved by voters at the recent city election to-day marked the first step toward the rehabilitation of Chicago's traction systems at a stipulated cost of $40,000,000, and is the first fruits of victory by the new Republican administration in defeating Democratic plans for municipal ownership.

Bion J. Arnold, Chairman of the Board of Supervising Engineers, said to-day that the first steps toward reconstruction would be retrackage. The action taken by the City Railway Company is expected to be followed by the Union Traction Company.

FORGOT HIS WEDDING DAY.

Lawyer Agrees to Try Case on That Day, but Remembers Afterward.

Thomas Griffin, a Jersey City lawyer, who was counsel for a man charged with assault yesterday, asked Police Justice Higgins to adjourn the case until some day next week. In reply to a query by the Justice, Mr. Griffin said Wednesday would suit, and the case was set for that day.

An hour later Mr. Griffin was back in court.

"I should like to have the date of that hearing changed," he said.

"Sorry," said the Justice, "but I don't see how it can be done."

"But it must be changed," urged counsel. "I forgot that I am to be married on Wednesday, and——"

"Oh!" said the Justice. "I won't spoil your wedding day."

The case was set down for Monday.

RUSHING ALASKA RAILWAY.

Guggenheim's Road to be Completed as Rapidly as Possible.

Special to The New York Times.

TACOMA, Wash., April 12.—S. W. Eccles, President of the Nevada Northern Railroad, a Guggenheim property, and personal representative of the Guggenheim interests in the Northwest, said yesterday that the Copper River & Northwestern Railway would be completed as rapidly as men and money could do the work.

"The Copper River & Northwestern Railway is really opening up Alaska," said Mr. Eccles. "It is the largest railway project devoted to that territory, and proposes to operate an all-the-year-round service. Preliminary surveys were commenced a year and a half ago. Every boat going north recently has carried men and material."

Mr. Eccles left last night for Salt Lake City. At Bonanza, the present terminus of the Copper River Line, are extensive copper properties, owned by the Havemeyers of New York.

BETZ IN AUTO SMASH.

Brewer's Son Badly Injured in an Accident in Philadelphia.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 12.—John F. Betz, Jr., son of the brewer, and William Oliver were so badly injured to-night, when an automobile in which they were riding ran into a street car, that it was feared they might die. John McFillin was less dangerously injured. Bernard Pierson, the driver, escaped injury.

Mr. Betz's nose was broken, his front teeth were knocked out, and his hand was broken. He also has concussion of the brain and possibly internal injuries. Mr. Oliver was badly cut, and he, too, possibly has internal injuries. Mr. McFillin's face, head and hands were lacerated.

Inability on the part of the chauffeur to control the machine caused the accident. Suddenly there was a crash. Mr. Betz was thrown with great force against the front of the auto, and his companions were thrown through the windows. They were taken to the Medico Chirurgical Hospital, where Mr. Betz and Mr. Oliver remained. Mr. McFillin went to his apartments in the Majestic Hotel.

Mr. Betz is a son of John F. Betz, the brewer; Mr. Oliver is an oil merchant, and Mr. McFillin is a retired stockman.

M. DOUMER FIGHTS INTRUDER.

Ex-Finance Minister of France Mistakes Telephone Man for Burglar.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 12.—There was much merriment to-day when it became known that clad in a suit of underwear Paul Doumer, former Finance Minister of France, had a desperate battle with a telephone lineman whom he mistook for a burglar in the Hotel Schenley last evening.

M. Doumer was dressing for dinner when he heard some one moving about in the adjoining room of his suite. Creeping into the room he pounced on the rough-looking intruder, and for the next few minutes there was all kinds of rough-and-tumble work in the room. Attachés of the hotel responded to the cries of M. Doumer, and finally succeeded in prying the astonished and angry lineman away from him.

Explanations were made by Manager Riley of the hotel, and it was then discovered that the lineman had been sent to the rooms of M. Doumer to repair the telephone.

THAW MISTRIAL; JURY WAS 7 TO 5

Majority for Conviction After Forty-seven Hours of Deliberation.

THE PRISONER IS BRAV

Bitterly Disappointed, but Shows No Breakdown in Court.

NEW TRIAL IN OCTOBER

Jerome Says It Can't Be Before That—Will Oppose Release on Bail.

CROWDS AWAITED VERDIC

Cheered Thaw's Wife and Fami When They Left After Hearing of Disagreement.

Failing to agree on a verdict after more than forty-seven hours of deliberation the Thaw jury was dismissed at 4:15 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

The first ballot, taken after the case was put into the hands of the jury, at 5:15 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, showed this result:

For murder, first degree.....
For manslaughter .....
For acquittal .....

Almost immediately on the announcement of this result the two who had voted for a verdict of manslaughter changed their votes to conviction of murder.

For several ballots the vote stood 8 to 4. Then there was one more change, which increased the number of those who would see Thaw free on the ground of insanity at the time of killing to five.

Thus the final vote stood yesterday 7 to 5, and the jury is said to have divided as follows:

FOR CONVICTION.	FOR ACQUITTAL.
Brearley,	Dennee,
Bolton,	Fraser,
Fecke,	Harney,
Gerstman,	Pink,
Newton,	Steele.
Pfaff,
Smith.

With no hope of a change from this attitude the jury was relieved of its task and all the work done since the first talesman was examined on Jan. 23 had gone for naught.

But Harry K. Thaw will be tried again for the murder of Stanford White. District Attorney Jerome says it will be October before the new trial can be moved. When court reconvenes on April 29 an application may be made for admitting the prisoner to bail. Mr. Jerome will oppose it.

Thaw, while bitterly disappointed at the result, bore up bravely. His family seemed more downcast.

Thaw's Disappointment Bitter.

The discharge of the jury and the declaration of a mistrial were brought about without dramatic effect. Harry Thaw had been told before entering the courtroom that the jury hopelessly disagreed, and that his counsel thought it best to concur with the District Attorney in proposing the dismissal of the jury.

The young Pittsburger had earlier in the afternoon again bundled up the mass of letters and documents which he meant to take with him from his cell. He was even at the eleventh hour hopeful of acquittal. He thought that the appeal of Mr. Delmas, who pictured him as a Sir Galahad rescuing forlorn damsels, would impress the jury so greatly that he would be liberated before the setting of yesterday's sun.

When he was told by Mr. Peabody and Mr. O'Reilly of his counsel that there would be a mistrial he dropped his bundle of documents to the floor. The bitterness of his disappointment was beyond words. He faced months more of confinement, and then the strain of another trial.

After some words of encouragement from his lawyers Thaw braced himself and followed his prison guard into the courtroom. He slipped into his chair at the head of the table reserved for the lawyers for the defense so quietly that few of those in court noticed him.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw slipped into the room from the door which leads to the Justice's chambers. Instead of taking her accustomed seat she swung a chair beside that in which her husband sat. She knew the result; she had been told by the lawyers who have made the fight for her husband's life and liberty.

As she sat close to him Thaw dropped his right hand toward her, caught her gloved hand, and held it fast.

Jury Is Dismissed.

Some court attendant pressed a button and the drab of a cloudy April afternoon was relieved by the glare of many electric lights. Clerk Penny arose from his seat and called to Thaw to stand and face the jury. He then turned to Foreman Deming. B. Smith and called to him and his eleven associates to face the defendant.

Thaw stood up. In the glare of the electric light his face showed plainly the pallor that comes from long imprisonment. The lines from the curve of his nostrils down to the chin seemed to have deepened, as if the keenly sharpened plow of adversity had suddenly furrowed them. A few moments before he had sat with his pitiful little treasures in his lap, all neatly [illegible]

d and ready to carry them to the great r life of which he had been deprived nearly a year. He had even arranged a tour abroad with his wife.

Thaw rose he threw back his heavy ulders and put his chin in the air. He ted squarely at Forsman Smith and Smith looked at Justice Fitzgerald. e end of the case was brought quickly. k Penny asked if the jury had reached erdict. Mr. Smith said, simply, that it not. He then plumped himself sud- ly into his chair, and Thaw sank into

Then Justice Fitzgerald said:

"Gentlemen of the jury, I have kept you eliberating so long because I regarded it my duty to do so, so long as there was possibility of reaching a verdict. I ve reached the conclusion that this is impossible. I have advised the Peo- representative and the defendant's ounsel that I do not intend to longer ept that you continue your deliberaons. I therefore discharge you from rther consideration of the case. Do I ve the consent of the public prosecutor d the counsel for the defense?"

Mr. Jerome and Mr. Hartridge both d: "We consent." Mr. Jerome added: For reasons known to your Honor this rt of court should be kept open, and I fore request that you do not, when adjourn, adjourn sine die, but to a e which your Honor may choose to ."

Court was then formally adjourned until ril 29, when application for bail may made.

The jurors jumped from their seats in box, entered the jury room, grabbed eir hats and overcoats, and hurried m the building.

Sad Parting for Thaw Family.

Harry Thaw, realizing that for the time ing his hopes of freedom were dead, ed about him in a dazed fashion. His mother and his sisters, Lady Yarouth and Mrs. Carnegie, and his broth- had slipped into the room and were ing behind his chair. The mother pped her veil, and if she wept none w it.

Evelyn spoke to her husband, pushed k her chair, and hurried through the ong of newspaper reporters and court endants.

Thaw pulled his overcoat over his arm d once more stood up and turned to fol- w his prison guard. At the door lead- to the path toward the Tombs Thaw ned and looked over his shoulder in direction of the place where his moth- sat. He seemed to desire a moment th her or with some one of his own d and kin. Evelyn Thaw had already t the room. Her face was placid; her sband's was terribly drawn.

Lady Yarmouth stared toward the nch, which Justice Gitzgerald had al- dy abandoned. Mrs. Carnegie, whose e has shown almost as haggard as the e of her brother on trial, stretched out r hands, and to Mrs. William Thaw gnified that it was time for them to part. The police cleared a way to their iting automobiles. Josiah and Edward aw walked together from the building.

The Final Day of Strain.

The day was one of anxiety not only to Thaw and his family, but to his counsel d to Mr. Jerome. In the early morn- , after rumor had it that a verdict uld be reached within an hour or two, velyn Nesbit Thaw, still attired as a hoolgirl, sat in the room adjoining the amber of Justice Fitzgerald with others iting for the final word of the jury. All of them felt that the end was near, the hour for dinner recess approached. here was still the slight hope that the ry would agree and bring in a verdict 1 o'clock. When that hour came the pe was not met.

Out of the building straggled the wait- groups, and they had to fight their y through the crowds that swarmed out the Criminal Court Building. Tho e among them who was most calm d pleasant of countenance, who was not rried by the crowds, nor dismayed by multitudes of crampling and curious ople was Evelyn Nesbit Thaw.

She went with one of the counsel for r husband, not to the French Café, on anklin Street, where a great crowd of ople had congregated to look at her, t to a restaurant on Park Row, where e enjoyed a meal undisturbed.

On her return there was such a swarm curious humanity about the Criminal ourt Building that Sergt. Kellerer, in harge of the court squad of police, was mpelled to ask for assistance. Again, rom Mulberry Street and from the Ten- erloin, came the crowds, anxious to see e woman who was depicted by Mr. Je- ms as the "angel child." In this mob were many women; some of them carried children in their arms. The police were compelled to use force to clear a way for the prisoner's wife.

Meanwhile, over in the Tombs, Thaw had written a communication to all of the newspapers explaining his action in going armed while in New York.

During this noon hour Thaw was told that the child of one of his keepers was dying. Thaw said to him, "Old man, you are in a sadder plight than I."

After his luncheon, Thaw was again brought back to the guards' room outside the court room for another long wait. This ended with the summons at 4:20 o'clock that he was to appear to hear the jury report, and then came the final scene of the trial, the jury's dismissal.

Thaw's Comment on the Jury.

Following his return to the Tombs, Thaw issued a second statement. It read:

"First statement since the disagreement and second and last statement today.

"I believe that every man on the jury, possessing over average intelligence, excepting possibly Mr. Bolton, comprehended the weight of the evidence and balloted for acquittal.

"All my family bid me good-by with courage.

"I trust, D. V., we may all keep well."

This statement was signed with Thaw's name. The reference in it to the balloting of the jury aroused considerable comment and discussion as to just what Thaw meant by it. It became generally accepted, however, that it had been thought advisable by the Thaw counsel to keep the real ballot of the jury from him, and that the prisoner may, in consequence, have issued his statement in the belief that the jury had stood at ten or eleven for acquittal.

Jerome Tells His Plans.

District Attorney Jerome was unwilling to comment at length upon the outcome of the case.

"There is little that I can say with propriety," he declared. "I may say, however, that, in view of the evidence which has been presented, and the attitude of the jury, I feel it my duty to again present to a jury the evidence for the acquittal or conviction of this defendant.

"There are, however, many homicide cases now under indictment; fifteen of them are murder cases of the first degree. These demand attention, and it would be improper to try them in any other than their regular order. In the meantime the retrial of Thaw must wait."

Mr. Jerome estimated that the cases deserving prior attention to the Thaw case will occupy the time from now until late into the coming Fall. With good luck, the Thaw case may be again reached by next October. In the meantime Thaw will be confined in the Tombs Prison. In regard to the admission of Thaw to bail, Mr. Jerome said:

"Application for admission to bail is a motion which any defendant has a right to make, and which the court must entertain. In view of the evidence adduced at this trial, however, and in view of the discussion which has gone on in the jury-room, and the attitude of the jury on the question of whether Thaw is guilty or not guilty, I should consider it my duty to oppose such an application, and when the facts in this case become known to the court, I am of the opinion that no Judge under any circumstances would grant admission to bail."

Change of Venue Not Necessary.

Mr. Jerome was asked concerning the generally accepted belief that a retrial of the Thaw case will be held elsewhere than in this city. He replied that in his opinion now such a course is extremely unlikely to be adopted.

"It must be remembered," he stated, "that a change of venue is not a mere arbitrary matter to be settled as pleases the District Attorney or as pleases the court. The application for a change of venue has to be based upon satisfactory reasons set forth in sworn affidavits.

"The only ground upon which a change of the place of trial can be made in a case like this one, is that it would be impossible to obtain a jury in this county which would try the case fairly. Now, in view of the precedents of the past, notably in connection with the trial of the members of the Board of Aldermen in 1884, in relation to which there had been the most widespread publicity, some of the newspapers even going so far as to print exact copies of the testimony, yet for which a second jury was readily empaneled, I do not at present see any reason to believe that it will be necessary to have a change of the place of trial in this case.

"I see nothing at present which leads me to believe that twelve men cannot be selected from the lists of those liable to jury duty in this great county, twelve men who will be able to serve acceptably to this great County of New York, and who can give a fair trial to this defendant."

Think Jerome Is Elated.

Despite Mr. Jerome's refusal to divulge his own opinion of the outcome of the case, persons who have had an intimate knowledge of the trial from its beginning, declare that the District Attorney cannot feel other than elated at the result—more pleased perhaps at the disagreement than he would have been at a conviction.

It is pointed out by these persons that almost from the beginning of the trial Mr. Jerome has felt that Thaw, if not insane in the legal sense, was certainly mentally deranged from a medical viewpoint. A conviction would, therefore, these persons point out, have placed the District Attorney in the unenviable position of having successfully prosecuted for murder in the first degree, a man whom he himself believed beyond the pale of the law.

As the case now stands, Thaw will be kept in the Tombs Prison for several months. The mental suspense as well as the physical strain of these months of imprisonment and enforced idleness cannot, it is believed, fail to bring to a crux any mental ailment Thaw may now be suffering from. Jerome's course in such an event would be easy. He would no longer be compelled to bring Thaw again to Trial for his life. Instead, he might, this time with some hope of success, apply for a second Lunacy Commission which would send the young Pittsburger to Matteawan Insane Asylum.

Should Thaw, on the other hand, successfully withstand the ordeal to which he will be submitted for the next few months, those who think they know Jerome's own feelings, say that his last doubt of Thaw's sanity will have been removed, and he will be enabled to bring him to the bar the second time with the full accord of his own conscience.

Thaw's Lawyers Undecided.

Clifford W. Hartridge, counsel of record for the defense, said late last night that he could not discuss the matter of an application for bail for his client at that time.

"It will be necessary for counsel to get together and consider this matter," he said.

Thaw's Family Surprised.

When the members of Thaw's family reached their hotel, the Lorraine, reporters were waiting for them, but they would say nothing. In the hall was an acquaintance of the Countess of Yarmouth, and to her she spoke as she waited for the elevator.

"Isn't it terrible? I can't understand it," she said.

It was said that the Countess sent a cable messags to her hueband, saying:

"Great disappointment."

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw arrived a few minutes after the others. She was alone. The same dull incomprehension of what had happened and why it had happened was the note of her cry. As she was asked what she thought of the end of it all she said:

"I can't understand it. I don't see why they couldn't have come to an agreement."

"They say the jury stood seven to five for conviction," some one said.

"I don't believe it," she cried. "On the evidence they ought to have acquitted him."

Neither callers nor messages were received by the Thaws last night. For a long time no word could be had from their apartments, but at length a telegram was delivered to Mre. William Thaw. It asked her if there was anything she wished to give out and whether there was anything in the rumor that Thaw intended to drop all his counsel except Daniel O'Reilly. To this she sent the reply:

"Mrs. Thaw has nothing to say. She has made no statement since she has been in New York; neither will she make any."

HOW THE DAY PASSED.

Thousands in the Streets Awaited News from the Thaw Jury.

The disagreeing jurors in the Thaw case were awake all of Thureday night. Occasionally one would doze off as he sat in his chair, but the others would arouse him, and once more pour into his ears the interminable arguments about the sanity or insanity of Thaw at the time of the shooting.

They had nothing but the table and chairs to rest upon, and although they brought in with them the padded seats from the jury box, these were slight comforts for men who had already passed a night without lying down. They darkened the room, but kept up their debats all night.

It was a welcome relief to all when the time came for breakfast. The court attendants were in almost as hard a fix as the jurors. They had to act as attendants in court all day and as special officers at night. One of them said yesterday that in fifty-six hours he had been asleep for exactly three.

The jurors left the Criminal Court Building soon after 7 o'clock. As they straggled up Broadway to the Broadway Central Hotel they were guarded closely by Capt. Lynch and his men, but there was no attempt to interfere with them. They looked a thoroughly washed-out lot, hardly able to drag their feet along.

Breakfast made a vast difference in them. It revived their spirits, and almost as soon as the meal was over they began to argue together again. They seemed careless of appearances in their anxiety to reach a verdict, and men who passed the hotel to their work could see part of the deliberations which would decide the fate of Thaw carried on in full view in the window. Malcolm S. Fraser was to be seen gesticulating with energy as he tried to convince Oscar A. Pink that the insanity plea was utterly out of the question, and Jossph B. Bolton, the juror the death of whose wife delayed the trial for so long, could be made out reclining wearily in the chair while Charles D. Newton talked to him.

Bernard Gerstman and Harry C. Bresrley were together in a corner apparently running over the arguments which already for many hours they had been enforcing upon the attention of their colleagues.

In the procession back to the Criminal Courts, which began soon after 8 o'clock, the same preoccupation seemed to possess all of them, and only Bernard Gerstman and Oscar A. Pink seemed to have found any subject on which they could chat without serious disagreement.

Thaw's Troubled Night.

Thaw himself had passed nearly as troubled a night as his jurors. He tossed from side to side on his prison bed and caught only naps the whole night through. He had been warned by his counsel that the jury had already almost endured more than the human frame could stand, and he was haunted by the idea that their disagreement would condemn him to at least another six months' weary confinement, or that those who favored his acquittal might submit to a compromise which would send him to Sing Sing for the best daye of his life.

Still he kept up the marvelous pluck which has astonished all who have come near him. When he was called he declared he felt "fine," and ran to the shower bath for a toning up for all the day might bring forth.

He was over in the Criminal Court Building by 10:30 o'clock, the hour set for the convening of the court, and settled himself in the Sheriff's guardroom to await a summons to appear before the jury. He appeared somewhat worn and pale as he passed across the Bridge of Sighs, but to inquiries called to him as he went by he replied with his stereotyped:

"I'm fine; thank you."

For a time he was left alone with Mr. Hartridge. His wife and family had come down to the Criminal Court Building and were ready to stand by his side when the last ordeal came, but for some reason or other they did not hasten up to the Sheriff's room. They remained in the little room which has been placed at the service of witnesses for the defense since the trial began, and allowed the defendant to pass the first part of the morning without their comfort.

This seems to have been because Thaw had made up his mind that he should issue another statement. Mr. Hartridge did all he could to dissuade him. He assured him that it would be absolutely useless so far as his own case was concerned, and that it might be misconstrued. He pointed out that the jury were absolutely beyond the reach of outside influencee, and the utmost that it could accomplish would be to satisfy morbid curiosity. The defendant, however, insisted, and about 11 o'clock Thaw's latest thoughts were revealed to the world.

Thaw Tells of Being Armed.

At the very moment when his fate hung in the balance, when hundrede of men and women were gathered in the building to hear at the first possible moment the verdict of the men who had tried him, he seemed to worry most about the opinion that the outside public might have of his personal courage. He wrote:

"I wish the jury and every one else to understand that no one despises a person who carries concealed weapons more than I.

"That only after my life was in jeopardy, as I was informed by persons and as was communicated to me by professional detectives, did I protect myself. Then I employed the Pinkertons, and they could neither prove these attempts so I could invoke the protection of the law or disprove them so I could safely continue defenseless.

"Then doubting my judgment, I consulted an ex-Chief of Police and respected in his community, and he advised that my duty was to protect myself.

"In this trial I wished my case solely and simply based on the law of the State and upon the evidence which had convinced not only me, as I reviewed all this evidence in quiet, but also the District Attorney, that I am innocent under the written law of the State."

Efforts to Get Into Court.

To get past the police lines which barred the way to the courtroom all sorts of subterfuges were used. But by Justice Fitzgerald's order none but reporters were to be admitted, and women particularly were barred. One tackled the big Sergeant who has been so conspicuous a feature of the scenes of the trial.

"I represent a London paper," she said.

"Don't you know the Lee Avenue Station at Brooklyn?" replied the Sergeant.

"Why, yes."

"I used to be stationed there."

"And?" she asked innocently.

"There's no 'and' about it. I was stationed there and that's all there's is about it."

"What a wonderful memory for faces you do have," said the woman. "I used to think I could get around any man, especially the handsome ones."

Even that did not touch the Sergeant's heart, but somehow or other later in the day persistency won. The woman actually got seated in the courtroom, and was turned out immediately by the hard-hearted court officers. She spent the rest of the day in the corridor watching for the lawyers as they passed to and fro.

The Crowd Outside.

Just after noon it was made known that the jurors saw no chance of early agreement, and that they thought it would be well to get something to eat. This was taken as a sign that nothing would happen until the middle of the afternoon. Justice Fitzgerald announced that the court was adjourned until 2 o'clock, and went off himself to lunch.

Twelve o'clock is the dinner hour in all the workshops in the neighborhood of the Criminal Court Building. Thousands pour out on the streets at that hour and a goodly proportion of them thought that they would like to get a glimpse of the women of whom they had heard so much in connection with the trial. They came down to the Courthouse, and would have gone in if the police had not been ready for them.

Then they stood outside on the White Street side and looked at the automobiles standing at the side entrance, waiting for Mrs. William Thaw. Others preferred Franklin Street and hoped against hope that before they had to go back to work they might catch a glimpse of two shadows passing over the Bridge of Sighs which they might interpret as the signs that Thaw and his guards were passing that way.

Inspector McCluskey was on hand to keep them in check. He had fifty men under his orders, and the crowd was pushed back up the side streets nearly as far as Broadway. On Thursday, Evelyn Nesbit Thaw had gone to Pontin's to lunch, and particular attention was paid to keeping the way clear as far as that.

Rush to See Thaw Family.

The first amusement the spectators got was the departure of Mrs. William Thaw, Mrs. Carnegie, and Lady Yarmouth from the building. As usual they got into their automobiles and started rapidly uptown for the Hotel Lorraine. At once the crowd broke through the police lines. The women scrambled upon trucks, the men surged across the street, and children came running up from all directions. Two or three thoueand people were rushing wildly along to see three heavily veiled ladies drive away in automobiles. They were wildly excited and cheered the relatives of the defendant heartily. However, the automobiles soon escaped them, and they turned to see who else was worth notice.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw was the next to come out. She was too anxious to go as far from the Court House as the hotel and she wished to be back again as soon as her husband had returned from his lunch in the Tombs. At the same time, she had no wish to go through the unpleasant experience of Thursday, when she was mobbed on her way back from Pontin's. So, with Daniel O'Reilly, she decided to go to a restaurant on Park Row, where her identity would not be so likely to be discovered. She started in an automobile and was greeted with the same cheers and the same rush as Mrs. William Thaw and the others.

Small Fire in the Building.

After the family of the defendant had departed, the crowd had an unexpected excitement. From the windows of the Criminal Court Building, directly below the Bridge of Sighs, smoke was seen issuing. A rush was made along Franklin Street. However, the police managed to restore order, and, hearing that the fire was slight and was already under control of the court attendants, prevented an alarm being turned in.

As a matter of fact, it was Harry K. Thaw himself who discovered the fire. As he was going across the bridge to his lunch he smelled smoke. He called the attention of his guard to it and Superintendent Coppers of the building was also warned. He instituted a search immediately and found that the smoke was coming from a small examination room attached to the Tombs Police Court.

An old umbrella thrust behind a radiator was the cause. Some one had thrown a cigarette end upon it and the fabric was smoldering. It was quickly extinguished, but in order to do so a part of the partition had to be chopped away.

Although no one expected that the jury would have anything to report before 3 or 4 o'clock, every one was on hand again soon after 2 o'clock. Once more Thaw was led across the Bridge of Sighs to the Sheriff's guard room, and once more his family took up their weary watch in the little room set apart for them. Every now and then one or other of them would go up stairs for a few minutes and keep him company, but most of the time he was alone with his guards or his lawyers.

Delmas on the Bench.

In the courtroom the reporters and a few privileged persons sat around and amused themselves as best they might. They formed little knots and talked or they sat at the long table writing their copy. Even rumors were scarce and speculation as to the progress of the jury was almost dead. Infinite weariness beset every one and the most that any one said about the case was to wonder whether there was to be a third night of tedious vigil.

But one incident broke the monotony of the day. Mr. Delmas suddenly appeared sitting in the Judge's chair on the bench as he signed his name for a woman reporter in her copy of the great hypothetical question compiled by Mr. Jerome.

"Order in the court!" some one called out, and in a moment Daniel O'Reilly appeared smiling as ever at the bar.

"May it please your Honor," he began, but his motion did not please the court, for in a moment the learned counsel from the Pacific Coast had slipped down to his former seat.

With all the apparent flippancy of the assemblage and the absence of set decorum the sense that a great crisis was impending was never absent. Men laughed and joked because they had nothing else to do.

Counsel, court officials, and reporters had been under a great strain for hours and were expecting a still greater one. They sought relief in the best way they could, but kept an anxious eye the whole time upon Capt. Lynch of the court squad.

From him only could authentic news of the jury's proceedings come. The guard sitting outside the door of the conference chamber had to report to him, and he took such action as the occasion demanded. He was willing enough to give out any information that was legitimate, but sternly refused to give a hint of the way they were getting along with their deliberation.

About 3 o'clock a rumor spread that there was almost a fight behind their closed doors. Angry voices, it was said, could be heard even at the distance that the jury room is separate from the court. But Capt. Lynch professed himself ignorant of anything.

"Nothing to say," he replied to all inquiries.

Soon after 4 o'clock, however, he had news of the utmost moment to communicate, and at his intimation that at last the jury were coming in, counsel and the reporters flocked in from the hall, and everybody was on the alert for the end of the great trial.

While the jury was in court the doors were closed and locked. By the courtesy of Capt. Lynch arrangements were made by which bulletins could be passed out by the side door leading past the Judge's chambers to the main hall, but no one was allowed to disturb the proceedings by leaving his seat.

Within the police lines outside the court a number of reporters stood waiting the first intimation of what had taken place. Others were at the telephone booths, holding the wires to their offices. As the bulletins were passed out they tried to intercept them, but they were handed quickly to boys and rushed out of the building. For five minutes no one could tell what was in progress.

Crowd Hear the Result.

Suddenly the door leading to the passageway from the side door of the court was burst open. Three or four men rushed out. "Disagreement!" they shouted. They plunged wildly for the stairs leading to the telephone booths, and it was lucky no one was in the way of their rush.

"Disagreement" took up the crowd in the corridor, and a great shout went up. Down the stairs pelted the reporters, and in a minute the news was being flashed over the wires to the newspaper offices and called along the street.

Inspector McCluskey had been just outside of the side door of the court while the jury was in. He rushed out at the clamor and gave hurried orders to the police. He bade them clear every one off the main floor of the building, whether they had legitimate business there or not. Happily, the men who have been guarding the courtroom for the last three months have got on good terms with the reporters. They knew that there was no one there but had work to do, and they interpreted the Inspector's orders with judgment. They made the crowd move, but they cared not where they went. The reporters stepped quietly behind them and were able to attend to their business without molestation.

The jury were sent back to their room as soon as they were discharged. There is an unobtrusive little door leading to it which has been provided for just such occasions as this. From it the twelve men issued and vanished as quickly as they could down the elevator.

GREAT INTEREST IN LONDON.

Extras Giving the Result of the Trial Eagerly Bought.

LONDON, April 12.—Interest in the trial of Harry K. Thaw for the murder of Stanford White, which at first was intense here, lagged toward the end of the proceedings, but the unexpectedly prolonged deliberations of the jury and the novelty for the British public of the circumstances surrounding the final scenes, raised curiosity here to a fever point to learn what the outcome of the strange case would be. Within a few minutes of the receipt of the cable dispatch announcing that the jury had disagreed, the streets of London, in spite of the lateness of the hour, echoed with the shouts of the newsboys, the newspapers were bought up eagerly and the people everywhere discussed with unusual avidity the likelihood of another trial.

All the papers publish long editorial articles on the Thaw case, and most of them review the various stages of the trial. It is declared that American prestige has suffered severely, and the case is called "a signal proof of the utter inefficacy of American statesmanship to evolve a practical legal system."

One paper says: "Law, dignity, common sense and order, all have been wanting." Another says: "A strong English judge would have made short work of the trial, reducing to a minimum its degrading sensationalism."

Surprise is expressed that Justice Fitzgerald did not dominate the proceedings, as would an English judge, and prevent the defense from "getting up gush and greasy sentiment about a girl wife," and the prosecution from "such a flagrant abuse of justice" the questions Mr. Jerome was allowed to put to Thaw's wife. The methods of counsel generally are condemned.

mas's address and in his case in chief—was ignored. The defense of legal insanity was the only thing considered to be properly competent for discussion. The addresses made were earnest, forceful, and in many cases rising to a degree of impassioned oratory. They were also long and continually referred to supporting points of evidence as recollected by the speakers.

Attention was almost immediately fixed upon the events of the fateful June evening from which all the subsequent events have grown, and throughout the succeeding two days probably no words were quite so frequently spoken as these:

"Did he know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, and did he know that it was wrong?"

Opinions differed. Nay, more: opinions earnestly differed, and each man was so conscientiously sure of the correctness of his deductions that to each it seemed only a question of fully stating his viewpoint to secure unanimous agreement. Unhappily this hope was destined to recede as the long hours wore themselves away, and to be finally extinguished to an accompanying disappointment almost too deep for words. It is hard to see how any jury under any circumstances could have striven more earnestly to avoid such an unfortunate termination.

In the midst of an animated debate which was being conducted with such keen interest that no note had been had of the flight of time, a knock on the outer door hushed all voices. The opening disclosed Capt. Lytch, who asked the jurors to assemble for a trip up town to dinner at the Broadway Central.

Jury's Idea of Thaw.

Despite the lateness of the hour—after 7 o'clock—and the continuous effort of the day, the men were not a little disappointed at the enforced interruption. Soon after 9 o'clock they were back again in their places, and a third ballot taken before 10 o'clock evidenced no change in the alignment. In due course the formal debats broke up naturally into individual arguments between pairs or among small groups, scattered about the room as they strove earnestly with each other. The hope in the minds of all was for some early agreement, and efforts of the most zealous nature were put forth.

Those contending for conviction acted upon absolutely impersonal grounds. There was not the slightest suggestion of a spirit of bloodthirstiness in anything that was said. Rather the feeling was one of all proper sympathy for the defendant and the members of his family.

It was freely admitted by some of this number that Thaw was hardly to be considered an absolutely normal man by their own standards. He impressed some as of a marked degenerate type, and some thought that he had justified himself in the shooting. But, as was repeatedly stated, the verdict must not be reached upon any question of Harry K. Thaw's own moral standards, but upon his knowledge of the law as it related to the taking of human life. In other words, again and again was it queried in the familiar formula, "Was he laboring under such form of mental unsoundness as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing and not to know that he did wrong?"

First All-Night Debate.

Almost every speaker for conviction stated with solemn earnestness that he had mentally struggled against his formed convictions as the evidence had piled up, and even now would thank any one who could point out to him conscientious reasons for a change of opinion.

By a process of elimination it was endeavored, in some instances, to discover all possible elements of agreement in order to localize the points of dispute. It was found that not a few of these rested upon difference in recollection of certain points of evidence. As the night wore away it became increasingly apparent that little progress was being made and that little could be made until the opening of court made it possible to secure enlightenment. The vigor of discussion finally lapsed into a lull, broken now and again by sporadic outbreaks, and various exhausted jurors curled up from time to time in the cramped confines of their chairs, or upon the hard table, in the attempt to get a little sleep. Some succeeded measurably, but some had had no sleep whatever when the early morning light began to show in the Walker Street windows.

The coming of morning awakened anew the spirit of argument, but by 7 o'clock, the time of starting out for breakfast, it was pretty generally agreed that the next step must be the securing of additional information from the court.

Anxious Faces of the Defense.

The streets were astir with the early morning workers when the party went again to the hotel. Upon return there were so many different exhibits and points of testimony desired that a rather formidable list was sent in to Justice Fitzgerald, and shortly thereafter the whole party were ushered into their accustomed jury box seats, where they faced an expectant roomful. The defendant and his wife were obviously cheerful, although they gazed very earnestly at the faces of the jurymen. These in turn attempted to betray no expression which should indicate their position as to a verdict. As the various parts of testimony were read, the writer thought that he detected a somewhat more anxious air at the table of the defense, which might have been due to the fact that the points in question very largely concerned the events of the night of the shooting, and of that alone.

Thus were consumed several hours. Luncheon followed in the jury room, and then the key of Capt. Lynch turned again in the lock and attention became at once occupied with the many exhibits which had previously been in dispute.

For one thing, the testimony of James Clinch Smith came in for a great deal of discussion. Whether or not from his seat it would have been physically possible for him to follow with his eye the figure of Thaw as he walked down the Madison Avenue aisle of the roof garden, and from thence to the entrance, was considered to have an important bearing. Recourse was had to the diagram of the roof garden for light upon this point.

Where Thaw Kept His Pistol.

The testimony in regard to Thaw's pulling a revolver from his pocket was regarded as very important. Mr. Jerome in his summing up had referred to the fact that when Thaw stepped out into the hall beside the elevators he had time in which to slip his revolver from the holster in his pocket and place it in the more convenient pocket of the light overcoat he wore. It had been warmly debated during the evening before whether the testimony actually bore out this contention.

If Thaw had had the revolver in his overcoat pocket it was argued that it would have shown distinct premeditation for the following reasons: The overcoat must have been of a very light nature, consequently it is not to be thought that Thaw had previously had his revolver in that pocket. It was recalled that he had just been dining at the Café Martin, where his overcoat must have been handed to a check boy or waiter. Anything so conspicuous as a heavy revolver in the pocket would have been exposed to the possibility of investigation by any of the employes of the restaurant. Clearly, therefore, the revolver must have reposed in the holster later taken from it, and must have been in its accustomed place in his hip pocket when he left the restaurant and reached the Garden.

There was no evidence to show that he expected to find White there that evening although a "first night" performance at the Garden roof pavilion might have suggested such a possibility. It seemed distinctly more likely that Thaw caught sight of his enemy, quite by accident, later in the evening. If it could be shown that the revolver was in his overcoat pocket instead of his holster at the time he approached his victim, it would be a strong indication of the fact that the impulse to kill antedated the moment when he stood near him.

This was the controlling motive in asking for the testimony of Blaize, Cohen, Paxson, and Brudic; but unfortunately none of them seemed to make an explicit statement upon this point. Whether or not the confirmation of Mr. Jerome's assumption could be found in other portions of the extremely voluminous records, both direct and cross, might have been determined in course of time. So much time was consumed in going through the installment of the morning's request and so much material for consideration was thereby produced that no further search for the overcoat pocket evidence was then attempted.

Value of Clinch Smith's Testimony.

James Clinch Smith's story was rehearsed in full. The fact that the defense had accepted it in full as was apparent from Mr. Delmas's summing up, made it unnecessary to question its veracity. A very large part of the argument of those who advocated conviction was based upon what he testified to. Mr. Smith testified, it will be remembered, with great explicitness to the details of a conversation in which Thaw did most of the talking and discussed a wide range of current topics, including a criticism of the performance then taking place upon the stage, the condition of the stock market, various aspects of ocean travel, companionship with young women, mutual acquaintances, and various other casual matters, in a way which it was contended indicated a state of mind far removed from uncontrollable insanity. He also testified as to Thaw's getting up and looking over the heads of the audience in the general direction of White's table, and then walking about the Madison Avenue and Twenty-eighth Street aisles, but always turning his head in such a way as to direct his gaze toward that immediate section.

The significance of his passing out of sight through the door by the elevator has already been indicated. The return, with eyes still directed as before, the ascent into the gallery where presumably he might get a better view of the exact situation on the floor below and his return to his seat, seemed all points of much significance.

It was argued that Mr. Delmas's ingenious supposition that this showed him only to be looking for a vacant seat was nullified by the fact that he had had a very good seat with Smith and was evidence in its turn of the importance attached by the defense to this point.

Thaw's Great Self-Possession.

Another point of significance was the fact that McCaleb later had a little conversation with Smith, although McCaleb, when testifying earlier in the trial, did not, as far as could be recalled, make any mention of Smith, who did not come into the case until some weeks later. The events succeeding the shooting were of equal interest, and about this there was much more difference of opinion.

Some feeling that the various actions, such as raising the pistol butt upward, making no effort to escape, telling Mrs. Thaw that he had probably saved her life, and so on, could not have occurred had he been in an approximately sane condition; and others drawing a directly opposite deduction from the same incidents. The defense advocate had been impressed by the testimony of the three doormen, which was among the matters called for and referred particularly to the one who spoke of Thaw's "hearing voices of little girls" in the station house."

Argument was made to as whether, if Thaw had been approximately rational, immediately before the shooting, and rational enough to be cognizant of many points including the disposition of his wife, telephoning to George Lauder Carnegie, referring to the danger of remarks in the street being overheard by reporters, desire to consult counsel, invention of a false name and address, refusal to speak before he had consulted with counsel, and even his ability to comment upon the character of the cigars furnished him, his insanity must be localized in the very short period of the shooting itself, and evidenced by that incident alone. If that were the case and the killing of a man was, in itself, incontrovertible evidence of a man's legal insanity upon the point of killing, it was argued that such a thing as a murder trial for anybody at any time under any conditions became necessarily a farce, and that the same logical process would include every other form of criminal action, and criminal law become simply a matter for expert alienists. This whole subject gave rise to more thousands of earnest arguments than is restful to recall.

Wife's Story in the Background.

The story of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw was rather surprisingly forced into the back-

A New Model of Pianola at a New Price

$215 Cash; or $15 Down and

$7 a Month

The new "Model K" Pianola on which these exceptionally low terms are quoted is a genuine Pianola made by the Aeolian Co. It has the Metrostyle, a feature that is not even approximated in any other instrument, and which the leading authorities declare to be absolutely essential to the best results.

THERE is always satisfaction in knowing that one owns the very best article of its kind. There can be no question of the Pianola's universal supremacy, except on the part of those directly engaged in promoting the sale of some other instrument. Ninety-nine people out of a hundred, when "Piano-player" is mentioned, think first of the Pianola.

If you stop to consider the daily delight that the ownership of the Pianola will bring to the entire family, the monthly expenditure of $7 seems trivial in comparison. The "Model K" costs $215 in ebony or $225 in mahogany, walnut or oak. Simple interest charged on deferred payments.

IN THE JURY ROOM: BY JUROR NO. 6

ground by the line of discussion developed. Thero was some difference of opinion as to its credibility, and yet, so far as it developed, the balance of opinion seemed to be rather in her favor.

It must be remembered that the harrowing details which occupied so much time in the conduct of the case bore largely upon the unavowed defense of "unwritten law." Therefore the jury's virtual ignoring of the unwritten law made comparatively little place for discussion of her story. It was virtually admitted that she had told her story to Thaw in Paris, some members of the jury convincing themselves of this fact by a re-examination of the letters written by Thaw to the then Miss Nesbit. (Exhibits A to I.)

It was generally agreed that she had been a remarkable witness. There was some division of opinion as to her character, but no great amount of discussion. Whether or not she was correctly defined by Mr. Delmas as an "angel child," it was felt that there was an element of distinct heroism in her going through the ordeal of the witness stand. Whatever doubt was cast upon her story came more from the circumstances of its telling and from collateral reference in other testimony than from the famous Hummel affidavit. Several of the jury gave some little weight to this affidavit; but to most of those who discussed it, the reputation of Hummel so affected consideration on any production of his that it was even a trifle amusing to think that Mr. Delmas had wasted so much breath and oratory in neutralizing it.

Juror Switches to Insanity.

The advocates of acquittal based their judgment upon a variety of points. Dr. Bingaman's testimony that from childhood he had been subject to strabismus, St. Vitus's Dance, and other nervous ailments, indicating that he was of a strongly neurotic character, the probable effect upon such a constitution of the life of dissipation that he had led since growing up, the probable effect of the receipt of the story in Paris, the strongly melancholy strain running through the letters A to I—although the letters themselves seemed distinctly lucid—his actions when in Pittsburg as related by his mother, his manner with Drs Evans and Wagner when they examined him in the Tombs, and his manner and appearance in court.

The most interesting argument upon this side was made well in the afternoon of Thursday, when one juror, originally an advocate for conviction, after an hour or two of careful inspection of the documents secured from the court, got up at last to speak in his turn and surprised every other member of the jury by announcing that his mind had been changed, not by any arguments he had listened to but by his own deductions.

Talks as Well as Delmas.

The speech in which he stated his conclusions was in the matter of genuinely fervid oratory of a character quite worthy to rank with the handling of the subject by Mr. Delmas himself, and the fact that it was a strictly extemporaneous effort made it, in the opinion of all the body, distinctly a remarkable performance. Ha was warmly complimented by both sides at its conclusion, and his unquestioned genuineness of conviction introduced a new feeling into the atmosphere of the jury room, where something of a deadlock had previously prevailed.

The Sole Change—Request for Cots.

However, his was the only accession to the ranks of the minority—indeed the only definite change in the original grouping of the body effected during the entire forty-seven hours. Answering arguments were immediately made by several who held that an analysis of the events based upon a strictly intellectual judgment made it impossible for them to reach this conclusion, and the remaining seven continued unshaken throughout the balance of the forty-seven hours.

The advocates of acquittal made a strong point of the fact that when Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton was called to the stand by the defense, Mr. Jerome very strenuously objected to his giving his opinion and succeeded in keeping out the testimony while the jurors were in the room. As Dr. Hamilton was the only expert alienist said to have examined Thaw in the Tombs with the exception of Drs. Evans and Wagner, they held that this action, by inference, justified their position. The testimony of Drs. Evans and Wagner was made much of, and the jury returned twice to the courtroom in order to have read to them that section of the Judge's charge which dealt with the weight properly to be given to such testimony.

On Thursday afternoon a communication was drawn up addressed to the Judge, and making request for cots in case a verdict could not be reached before a reasonable time. It was pointed out that the health of the jurors was directly involved, and that in a public service of such importance this health should be safeguarded.

This letter was signed by all of the jurors, and delivered by kindly Capt. Lynch, who returned word that Justice Fitzgerald made a special search for authority which would permit him to comply, but could find none. Hence chairs and tables became again the order for the night for the very slight rest secured. The writer, for example had an aggregate of two hours' sleep out of the entire forty-seven.

Eight Ballots Taken in All.

Eight ballots in all were taken, and in some of them a strong effort was made to get together upon the compromise verdict originally suggested. Almost numberless private arguments were had between different individual jurors, and strong appeals were made before the parliamentary body of the whole, developing the fact that, while every one of the advocates of conviction agreed to the modified form, provisionally upon its being unanimous, none of the other side save one, and he the speaker before referred to, cast such a ballot in any of the votes, his reason being given as the belief that Thaw was now insane and should be restrained in the public interest in the only way open to the jury—that is, by a term in prison.

Upon the final ballot, taken just before sending word to tha Justice, all of those who modified their votes went back to their original position, leaving the ballot seven for conviction of murder in the first degree and five for acquittal upon the ground of insanity. The extreme disappointment with which it was finally admitted by all that there was no possibility of agreement can hardly be appreciated by any one who cannot put himself into the place of tired jurors, exhausted by forty-seven hours of tha most extraordinary effort, including an aggregate of only several hours of sleep in chairs or on tables, and who had been hoping against hope, long after probability died away, until the last vestige of possibility also disappeared that the public misfortune of a mistrial might be avoided.

It is small wonder that tears came to tha eyes of some and that others said with manifest earnestness that they would have stayed out another forty-seven hours were there the remotest chance of a unanimous decision being reached.

It is to be hoped that the public will not give undue weight to the sensational stories published in some of last evening's papers in regard to personal disputes among the jurors. It is perhaps small wonder if, after the extreme efforts and the nervous exhaustion consequent upon such an experience, the susceptibilities of some of the jurors became occasionally a trifle affected. The tremendous earnestness of the convictions displayed were the sufficient basis for occasionally loudly pitched voices. Many of the arguments, however, though made excitedly in the loudest tones and undoubtedly sounding, if overheard, like violent quarrels, were so entirely characterized by consideration and good nature that it is distinctly unfair for them to be given such unworthy interpretation.

The writer wishes to protest to the public that men of conscientious principles have been giving public service at severe personal inconvenience and heavy business loss to an extent quite exceeding anything which the casual reader of these words may appreciate, and in the name of decency and tha American spirit of fair play they are entitled to protection from sensational calumny.

In closing, the writer wishes to say that his attention has been called to an alleged quotation of his words in last evening's World, putting into his mouth statements of a decidedly bloodthirsty character. He trusts that his emphatic denial that he never said anything which could be even distorted into the statements referred to will quite suffice.

Ths final leave taking was marked by hand shaking, general good will and an appointment for a jury dinner in tha early future.

Mr. Brearley will contribute to Sunday's Times an article of exceptional interest, narrating the jury's impressions of the entire Thaw trial. The article will be accompanied by sketches of the jurors drawn by Mr. Brearley.

STORIES OF OTHER JURORS.

One Unpleasant Incident Due to the Long Strain.

Murder in the first degree was the verdict desired by seven of the twelve Thaw jurymen. Tha unwritten law was not considered for a moment by any of those who wished for an acquittal. Ths alienist testimony was entirely disregarded by all the twelve, and it was the real doubt that existed as to the mental responsibility of the defendant which saved him from a conviction.

This appears to be ths sum of the deliberations of the jury. They did not arrive at any result through lack of real endeavor.

The long strain of the trial and the deliberation told on the nerves of some of the jurors. There were many rumors yeterday of an unpleasant incident in the jury room. Of this Juror Steele said last night:

"Most of the friction in ths jury was between Pfaff and myself. It began by Pfaff wanting to open each day's deliberation with a prayer. Tbere was a good deal of objection to this, particularly on the part of Mr. Gerstman, who is a Jew. We finally gave in to Mr. Pfaff, however, and the first session on Wednesday was accordingly opened with a prayer. But after that it was discontinued.

"On Thursday Pfaff made a slurring remark about there being something irregular, and I told bim that if he made that remark with any reference to me he was a contemptible cur.

"There was a good deal of friction between us after that, but before we returned to the courtroom this afternoon we shook hands and agreed to forget it."

Deming B. Smith, the foreman, visited Mr. Jerome in his office after he was discharged, but refused in any way to discuss the verdict or the deliberations of the jury with any reporter.

George Pfaff shut off persistent inquiries effectually by returning immediately to his home and going to bed. He had two nights' rest to make up, and he did not wish to lose any time about it.

The First Ballot.

George H. Fecke, No. 3, had a good deal to say on the deliberations.

"The first ballot," he said, "showed 6 in favor of murder in the first degree, 2 in favor of manslaughter in the first degree, and 4 for acquittal. At the second ballot the two who thought manslaughter was a proper conception of the crime changed their opinion and fell in line with the majority. This gave 8 for murder in the first degree and 4 for acquittal.

"Those who urged acquittal stood entirely upon the ground that Thaw was legally insane—that is, that he did not understand the nature and quality of his act or that that act was wrong. It was decided that we should consider the letters he wrote, Defendant's Exhibits A to I, and should ask for the reading of the testimony relating to the shooting.

"When we received the letters Mr. Dennee made a very close study of them. He sat down at the table and pored over them. He was convinced that though they were not in themselves crazy, they showed that a substratum of craziness ran through them. He decided that he ought to give the defendant the benefit of the doubt and went over to those who voted for acquittal. In explaining his reasons he made an impassioned speech for over half an hour.

"Those who still stood out for a conviction made every effort to reach a verdict. They sounded the others as to whether they would agree upon a verdict of murder in the second degree, then of manslaughter in the first degree, and finally of manslaughter in the first degree, with a recommendation to mercy. It was absolutely impossible to reach an agreement, and so we had to be discharged."

"Did you pay much attention to the alienist testimony?" Mr. Fecke was asked.

"Practically none. We thought that it was about even on both sides. For myself I think that the law on insanity as a defense is in great need of revision."

"Why did you ask for Mr. Delmas's charge to be read to you?"

"Some one had said that he had claimed that Thaw was sane at the time he wrote letters A to I, and we wished to see if that was so. It was not a matter of any importance. As a matter of fact, we attended only to the evidence, and I do not think that there was a single reference made to either the speeches of Mr. Jerome or Mr. Delmas during our deliberations."

"What opinion did you form of the Judge?"

"We thought that he was very fair. It certainly seemed that when he decided against Mr. Jerome after he cited fourteen cases to him on a point of law he was wrong, but he rescinded that decision. We thought his charge, however, was excellent."

A Little Unpleasantness.

Mr. Fecke stated that, practically speaking, the jurors had not slept at all. They became very acrimonious at times and there was the one unfortunate incident. He was very reticent about this and would not say who were concerned in it. However, he admitted that one of the jurors had made an ill-advised remark to another and he thought that an actual blow was aimed. The others intervened and it was passed over.

"I bought my first newspaper since the trial began on my way home," he said. "I certainly have not read any newspaper and I do not believe any of the others have."

"What do you think of the jury system?"

"It's rotten."

"Do you believe in brain-storms?"

But the elevator door was closed, and Mr. Fecke was whisked away from his interviewers.

Juryman Pink, No. 4, was not doing any talking last night, but his next door neighbor had no hesitation in revealing the secrets of tha juryroom.

"Unwritten Law Ignored."

"Dementia Americana and the unwritten law were entirely ignored by the jury in their deliberations," said Juryman Henry C. Harnay, as he walked up Broadway with a Times reporter to the Broadway Central Hotel. "The only question that the jurymen considered and the question upon which they split was: Was Thaw sufficiently sane at the time insofar as Mr. Delmas upon the subject of wronged womanhood that he shot Stanford White and whether he was responsible for his actions."

John S. Dennse, No. 10, and Joseph B. Bolton, No. 11, had nothing to say for publication.

Juryman Gerstman said: "I would like to tell you something that would tickle you, but I can't. I must refuse to be interviewed as to any quarreling or recrimination among the jurymen. I won't even say that I think there was any quarreling."

It was reported on good authority that the five jurymen who voted for acquittal have agreed that in the event of Thaw's lawyers making an application to have their client released on bail, pending a second trial, they, the jurymen, will sign a petition asking the Judge to grant the application.

MRS. HOLMAN SILENT.

Won't Discuss the Result of Thaw Trial at Present.

PITTSBURG, Penn., April 12.—A reporter called at the Holman house tonight to get the opinion of Mrs. Holman on the disagreement of the Thaw jury. She would not be seen, but Mr. J. C. Holman, her husband, said:

"Mrs. Holman will have nothing to say for some time yet on this matter. It would be unfair at this time to do or say anything so she asks to be excused for the time being at least."

PITTSBURG LOST INTEREST.

Result Discounted by the Jury's Protracted Debate.

PITTSBURG, April 12.—Pittsburgers received the result of the Thaw trial with hardly any more interest when it was put upon the bulletin boards of the newspapers than they did the baseball bulletins.

The news came at a time when crowds were on their way homeward. Little groups would form about the bulletins and after a few minutes move on to give place to others. There was little comment, the disagreement having apparently been discounted when the jury repeatedly returned to the courtroom for information.

For about 12 hours after the case was given to the jury there was intense interest, and up to a late hour in the night crowds besieged the bulletin boards of the newspapers while from suburban points and clubs and hotels there were continual calls by telephone as to any action of the jury. Yesterday and to-day, however, tha intsrest flagged.

Among the places where tha greatest interest was displayed was the Duquesne Club, one of the exclusive clubs of the city, of which Harry Thaw was a member.

CRITICISES DELMAS.

Gleason Says His "Dementia Americana" Plea Was an Error.

John B. Gleason of Thaw's counsel replying to questions as to the disagreement of the jury, said last night:

"The disagreement of the jury was brought about solely by the unfortunate written law, which he characterized as 'Dementia Americana.' If, instead of this in his summing up, Mr. Delmas had called the attention of the jury to the insanity of Mr. Thaw, which was plainly proved, Mr. Thaw would have been acquitted without a doubt. The argument used by Mr. Delmas was an invitation to the jury to electrocute Mr. Thaw if they had any regard for their oaths."

Mr. Dalmas was the guest of honor at a dinner of the alumni of the California University held in the Hotel Lafayette last night. He did not seem to be at all perturbed about the disagreement of the jury in the Thaw case. About the rumor that he had retired from the defense he said to reporters:

"I have not retired from the case, and I have no reason to believe that either Messrs. Gleason, Hartridge, or Peabody have."

He was asked to give an opinion relating to the disagreement of the jury and replied: "I do not know any more of the disagrement than the general public. Besides, it is too early to discuss my plans for the future."

He was told that Mr. Gleason had said that if he had not offered tha "Dementia Americana" theory tha jury would have acquitted Thaw. Mr. Delmas said he had no comment to make.

Daniel O'Reilly of Thaw's counsel said: "I confess that I am disappointed. I really expected an acquittal. Perhaps now, in view of the verdict, Mr. Delmas made a mistake in using the term 'Dementia Americana.' But he made an honest effort and it might have been a mistake of judgment."

Mr. O'Reilly said that he would visit Thaw early to-morrow morning and have a talk with him, and that then some plan would be decided upon. He said that the lawyers in the case would have a conference to-day, and decide upon the question of asking for bail. Mr. O'Reilly intimated that after this he and Mr. Peabody would figure more prominently in the case.

Mr. McPike, partner of Mr. Delmas, was asked last night what he thought of the verdict.

"Personally, I am very much surprised and disappointed by the verdict. I confidently expected that there would be an acquittal on the merits of tha case.

"As to our future plans, wa came here to stay, and have had for some time past offices in the Equitable Building. I don't know whether Mr. Delmas would appear in a retrial of Thaw, but I'm pretty certain that I would not."

AGAINST INSANITY EXPERTS.

Bill to Eliminate Them from Defense in Murder Trials.

ALBANY, April 12.—A bill aimed against the abuse of expert testimony in murder trials where insanity is pleaded was introduced in the Assembly to-day by Majority Leader Moreland. The bill would prevent hypothetical questions being asked in any criminal case where insanity is a defense.

Mr. Moreland says the idea is to do away with the experts, who, he said, usually receive large fees for professional opinions favoring the side which retains them.

OPEN AIR LIFE FOR THAW.

Dr. Lorand of Carlsbad Would Subject Him to Work and Discipline.

PHILADELPHIA, April 12.—"A life in the open country, with rustic surroundings" was suggested as the proper place for Harry K. Thaw instead of a prison cell, by Dr. Arnold Lorand of Carlsbad, Germany, in a lecture delivered here tonight before the Medical Jurisprudence Society.

Dr. Lorand, who is a specialist in nervous diseases, criticised the system of allowing parties in criminal trials to employ their own experts. He said that Thaw was the probable victim of a condition bordering on insanity proper, where the will and reason have been so weakened that the patient though knowing that he is doing wrong, is driven to crime by an impulse he cannot resist.

"I cannot admit tha condition of 'dementia Americana,'" said Dr. Lorand, "but there is something which we might term 'dementia plutocratia.' It is not exclusively American, although it may be more frequent here than in some other countries because of the great number of rich men in the country.

"Idleness in the children of the rich, the lack of proper occupation, the gratification of every desire for whatever can be purchased, are powerful factors in producing criminality. In the Thaw case we see the results of such factors working together with hereditary predisposition to nervous disease.

"Society is in no way benefited by putting such a man in jail. Solitude and lack of occupation would only make his mental condition worse. Let him, under work and discipline with nourishing food, have a chance to regain his normal condition."

THAW NEWS IN TIMES SQUARE.

A Bulletin of the Disagreement Was in Place in Four Minutes.

Immediately the disagreement of the Thaw jury was announced, a huge sign reading "Thaw Jury Disagrees" was posted on the Times's bulletin board on Broadway. An eager crowd quickly gathered, and the man who was placing the bulletin anticipating how great was their curiosity to learn the latest news from the Criminal Courts Building, inserted the single word "disagreement" first.

It was the first bulletin posted in upper Broadway, and the news that the Thaw trial, that had lasted so many weeks, was at an end, for the time at any rate, spread with great rapidity. Soon a crowd that blocked the street had assembled to read the bulletin and make sure the reports were true. Street cars stopped in front of the building to let the passengers read the news, automobiles paused, and even the traffic policemen craned their necks to ascertain the latest news without leaving their posts.

Comments on the result were few, and at no time was there anything approaching a demonstration. Everybody had expected exactly what happened, the result being that there was a chorus of "I told you so's." The disagreement was announced at the Criminal Courts Building at 4:25 P. M. Four minutes later The Times bulletin was in position.

NO DEAL WITH MORSE.

New Haven Road and New England Navigation Company to be Merged.

there is ground for the statement that, after the Directors of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company rejected the Morse offer of $20,000,000 for the New England Navigation Company's properties, Mr. Morse renewed the negotiations and asked that a price be named, it can be stated now upon the highest authority that there is not the slightest ground for the report of the sale and coming transfer of the New England Navigation properties to him. In fact, it is stated, the situation is quite the reverse.

The fresh reports concerning the sale have undoubtedly arisen from steps which have just been taken to merge the New England Navigation interests with those of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company. This merger with the New Haven corporation of the New England Navigation Company interests is part of the plan of President Mellen for consolidating not only the marine interests of the steam corporation, but also the electric interests in the street railways under one management. In this way he expects to obtain greater economy and efficiency of administration in the whole New York, New Haven & Hartford system.

SHOT HIMSELF IN A DREAM.

Machinist, While Asleep, Fires at "Burglars" and is Badly Wounded.

Dreaming that a burglar had broken into his room and was attacking him, Gustave Johnson of 122 Fort Greens Place, Brooklyn, yesterday morning, fired, as he fancied, a shot from a revolver at tha imaginary intruder and awoke to find himself dangerously wounded in the abdomen.

Johnson is a machinist. For several nights he had dreamed of burglars, fancying that a man who seemed to be an "Irishman" was in the room attacking him. So profound an impression did the dream make upon Johnson that he got very nervous. Early yesterday morning the vision returned. He imagined that the burglar had grappled with him, but that he had freed his right arm and snatched a pistol from under his pillow. Johnson really did take the revolver from under the pillow and fired a shot from it. A boarder in the house, going into the room, found Johnson lying on the bed with the revolver beside him and an ugly wound in the abdomen. He was taken to the Brooklyn Hospital, where it was said he was in dangerous condition.

YOUNG COCKRELL'S WIFE NOT ABROAD

His Father-in-Law, Robert G. Hogan, Denounces His Conduct in Europe.

DOESN'T KNOW COMPANION

But Warned Consuls General Abroad That the Woman Was Not Mrs. Cockrell.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, April 12.—Robert G. Hogan of this city, formerly of St. Louis, and father-in-law of Ephraim Cockrell, to-day repudiated his son-in-law and the woman who, according to a special cable dispatch from London to The New York Times, is introduced as his wife in London. Mrs. Ephraim Cockrell, daughter of Mr. Hogan, is now at tha home of her father, in Ilchester, Howard County. She said that she had not seen her husband for several months, but did not seem surprised at his actions in London and Paris.

"In order to correct a false impression which was sent out yesterday relating to my daughter, Mrs. Ephraim B. Cockrell," said Mr. Hogan, "I wish to state the trus facts concerning the actions of har husband and the imposter who is posing as Mrs. Cockrell in London and Paris. About a year ago Mr. Cockrell was employed by a banking firm in New York, leaving his wife at my home in Baltimore until he could prepare a home for her in New York. He made frequent visits to his wife and his father in Baltimore and Washington. About June 1 last he went away. His wife made every possible endeavor to find him in order to notify him that thera was no need for him to fear returning home, but she did not learn his whereabouts until about two months ago.

"She at once wrote, telling him his father had arranged his affairs, and had been ill for months. A few weeks ago we learned that he was introducing a New York woman as his wife in London and Paris. I at once notified the Consuls General in London and in Paris that the woman was an imposter, and that my daughter, Mr. Cockrell's wife, had been with me in Baltimore and part of the time with his sick father in Washington.

"My daughter has never used or received benefit from a dollar of her husband's money since he left, but has done all in her power to shield him. We are sorry this matter has become public, but as it has, my daughter's name must be protected."

In furtber discussing the case, Mr. Hogan said there were no legal proceedings contemplated on the part of his daughter against her husband, as she still cared for him and was very much cast down over the unfortunate chain of circumstances which had occurred to mar her married life.

"Eph" Cockrell finally won his bride while she was on a visit to St. Louis as the guest of Miss Bessie Yule, since married, divorced, and remarried. The young women went to the theatre with Cockrell, and afterward dined downtown. Young Cockrell pleaded with Miss Hogan for an immediate marriage and planned the wedding. Next morning Cockrell and Miss Hogan went to the City Hall, obtained a license, and were married. Almost immediately they boarded a train for Kansas City, where Cockrell was better known than he was in St. Louis.

After the World's Fair in St Louis Mr. and Mrs. Cockrell went to Mexico and remained for a long time. The excitement and allurement of Wall Street attracted young Cockrell to New York. There he speculated freely and spent money with a lavishness that bespoke success as a trader. His bonsts of having realized $50,000 on his ventures in stocks found ready credence among those who were the witnesses of his expenditures.

A year ago Mrs. Cockrell returned to her parents—at their request, report has it—and Cockrell went into eclipse for a time afterward. Several months ago young Cockrell appeared in London. With him was a woman—young, strikingly handsome, and commanding. She was Mrs. Cockrell, the young woman announced. Theatres, dinners, cards, excursions to the provinces and across the channel followed each other. The tour in the automobile took Cockrell and the woman to half a dozen European cities. In all they found friends and welcome.

Then came the appeal to the American Embassy in London for funds. It was for money and not a large sum. Just enough to put the young man on his feet until he found employment. He must work, he said, and was willing to begin. An attaché supplied some funds, no one knows how much. Cockrell went to Paris after his request had been met by the American Ambassador.

From the American Consul General ha obtained additional help in the same form. On his return to London young Cockrell was informed of a telgram which his father had sent begging some word from him or of him. A few friends attempted to persuade him to return to the United States. They failed.

"Eph" Cockrell is 25 years old. Like his brothers and sisters, he is of unusual strength and stature, standing 6 fee 2 inches.

THREE CHILDREN DISAPPEAR.

Rich Man's Daughter and Two Sons Taken from Ocean City by a Woman.

OCEAN CITY, N. J., April 12.—Three children of T. Wistar Brown disappeared from this city at noon to-day, and no trace of them has been obtained except that it is known they were taken across to the mainland in the steamboat Aurelia by a woman. The four then boarded a trolley car and went to either Pleasantville or Atlantic City, where trains could be had for Camden and Philadelphia. Owing to the ages of the children it was evident that they must have accompanied the woman voluntarily.

The woman wore a sealskin coat, small hat, and a green veil. The children she took away are Margeric, aged 15; Moses, 14, and William, 10 years. They had been to school, and were on their way home when they met the woman.

No one saw the meeting, and they were not seen on the streets together, but men who knew the children saw the four board the steamer which had come across the bay a little earlier.

Mr. Brown is wealthy and a member of a prominent Germantown (Penn.) family. He was indicted at the December term of court for cruelty to his children. Six counts were made, and on each Mr. Brown was subsequently convicted and sentenced. It was charged that he had whipped them excessively, and also that he had forced them to take ocean baths daily in the Winter. Mr. Brown was sentenced to pay a fine of $100 on each of six convictions. He took an appeal from the convictions.

Because Mr. Brown's relatives were active in protecting the children, it is thought it was some member of the Brown family who induced the children to accompany her. Their mother was in Philadelphia to-day and returned late in the afternoon in ignorance of the fact that the children had been taken away.

She became hysterical, and declared that persons were endeavoring to separate her from the children. Mr. Brown has appealed to the authorities to aid him in getting back his children, and declares that even if it is a relative who enticed them away he wants that person punished.

MAY APPEAL TO THE KAISER.

Mrs. Von Claussen Doesn't Want to Do It, but May Renounce This Land.

"I have by no means finished with this case yet, nor have I exhausted all my resources. I fully expect that President Roosevelt will send for me to see him within the next few days."

This statement was made last night by Mrs. Ida M. Von Claussen, who is stopping at the Prince George Hotel, after her unsuccessful attempt to see President Roosevelt to urge him to take some action in regard to the conduct of Minister Graves in refusing to present her at the Swedish cort.

"I am worn to a frazzle," she said over the telephone, "but I feel my strength returning to me when I remember that I have upheld American womanhood. Throughout my trials I have been forbearing. I love America, but if necessary I will renounce this land and ask the Kaisar to fight my battles for me. I am half German, you know, and could go to the German Emperor in my trouble. I do not want to do this, but if I am driven to it in order to obtain justice I hope that I am strong enough to do it."

Mrs. Von Claussen added significantly that there would be further developments either case or Monday.

CALLER GOT LAZARUS JEWELS

Told Maid He'd Wait Until the Family Came Home.

A well-dressed young man rang the bell at the apartment of Joseph Lazarus, a wealthy umbrella manufacturer, at 200 West 111th Street yesterday afternoon. To the maid who answered his ring the young man said:

"I suppose Joe is at home."

"Who do you mean by Joe?" asked the maid.

"Why, Mr. Lazarus, of course. I am a distant relative of his. He is in, of course?"

Then the maid explained that Mr. Lazarus was at his office at 74 Franklin Street, Mrs. Lazarus was out calling, and tha children were away at school. When she had finished the young man exclaimed:

"Why, I am astonished. I telegraphed to Joe that I was coming to visit him, and I should have thought that he would ba home to receive me. Well, I may as well wait."

So plausible seemed the young man that the maid made no objection to his entering the parlor, and she was sure that she had made no mistake when the young man took a picture from the mantlepiece, and, glancing at it, remarked:

"How well the children look!"

The young man removed his overcoat, and, asking for a morning newspaper, apparently settled down to wait for Mr. Lazarus. The maid returned to her kitchen, where she was preparing dinner, but in a few minutes the visitor called her.

"Can I have a glass of water?" he asked, and when the girl brought it to him he dismissed her, saying:

"I will call you if I want anything else."

An hour or so later the girl again stepped to the parlor door to ask if there was anything that Mr. Lazarus's nephew might like. To her surprise the young man was not in the room, and a search of the apartment showed that he had left the house. It also revealed that with him had gone a quantity of Mrs. Lazarus's clothing and jewels, which had been in her room opening off the parlor.

Thoroughly frightened, the maid called up Mr. Lazarus on the telephone, and ha, upon his arrival at the house, telephoned Police Headquarters. To Detective Walsh, who was sent to the house, Mr. Lazarus said that the jewelry which was missing was worth between $3,000 and $5,500.

The list of articles which the young man had taken included, besides a valuable Persian lamb coat belonging to Mrs. Lazarus, a pearl and diamond ring, with five stones, a gold watch and chain, a second watch and chain marked with the initials "H. L.," a diamond and pearl locket and chain, a pair of diamond cuff buttons, and a string of matched pearls.

Although he at first declared himself at a loss to account for the intimate knowledge of his family which the burglar had shown, Mr. Lazarus finally told the detective that he suspected the son of a prominent Harlem family, who disappeared from his home some weeks ago. This young man, Mr. Lazarus said, he had met at Asbury Park in Easter week and had become very well acquainted with him.

The police have refused to divulge the name of the young man who is suspected, but they expect to arrest him soon.

ARREST IN THE SARANAC.

Police Gather In Frank Irving, Alleged Handbook Man.

The Tenderloin police yesterday threw out a net for poolroom men. They arrested Frank Irving, whom they charged with making a handbook at the Saranac Hotel in Broadway, near Forty-second Street. Irving said he was 42 years old and lived at Broadway and Forty-sixth Street.

At first he said he was a guest at the hotel and was simply holding money for friends who were about to make a wager. He was arrested by Detectives Ferguson, Wrenn, and Marion. They said that Irving had $150 in his possession.

Irving finally admitted that his "bank roll" was genuine, but denied being a handbookmaker. The hotel manager knew nothing about the affair until he saw the police take Irving away.

CROMER TRULY GREAT SAYS MOBERLY BELL

Called the Foremost Living Englishman by the Manager of The London Times.

A MAN UNIQUE IN HISTORY

Retiring Administrator's Work Has Made Egypt a New Country—His Kindliness and Unselfishness.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 12.—C. F. Moberly Bell, the Manager of The London Times, who is here as one of the guests at the Carnegie Institute dedication, declares Lord Cromer, who has just resigned his post in Egypt, to he the greatest Englishman now living, and says there is no man in history with whom Cromer, in the work he has done, can he compared. Mr. Bell knows Cromer well and, when asked to-day for his opinion of the statesman, said:

"In Evelyn Baring, Lord Cromer, we have, considering the magnitude of the work he has accomplished, certainly the biggest living Englishman. I have known him very intimately since about the year 1877. He then came out to Egypt as English member of the Public Debt Commission. The finances of Egypt at that time necessitated an inquiry which was made by a commission of the Powers. Evelyn, then Major, Baring was the English member and though his name never came prominently forward it was generally recognized that he was the ruling member of the commission.

"Some time afterward he was named English Controller General, the Government of Egypt being then practically in the hands of an English and a French Controller. The French Controller was M. de Blignières. One heard a great deal of M. de Blignières, one heard nothing of Major Baring, and yet everyone knew while M. de Blignières was the prominent actor, the real man who pulled the strings was Major Baring.

"He then received the offer of the position of Finance Minister in India, which he accepted. A great deal of the future trouble in Egypt was due to his absence at that stormy period. The rebellion of the Egyptian army in 1881, and the occupation of Egypt by British troops in 1882, followed while he was absent and owing to a variety of causes into which it is unnecessary to enter. The state of the country at the end of the year 1883 was little removed from chaos. The authority of the Khédive was gone, and the English were afraid of taking the responsibility of reorganizing the Government.

"'At this period Major Baring, who had then become Sir Evelyn Baring, was appointed to succeed Sir Edward Malet, and his reign in Egypt commenced from about Jan. 1, 1884. The change was almost immediate. In place of disorganization there was the rapid gathering together into one hand of all the strings of administration. At the same time there was no hurried change, there was no revolution, but little by little he took in hand every single department.

"A very free hand was given him, because it was known that if any attempt were made to thwart him he would resign. He reformed every individual department. He obtained men from England. He left the nominal authority to the Khédive and to the Khédive's Ministers and Assistant these Ministers he appointed an Assista Minister who practically ruled the country under him.

"The progress that Egypt has made in these twenty-three years is hardly credible to any one who did not know the country then and now. I was in Egypt myself only a year ago for the first time in sixteen years, and though I had seen the effect of the first six years of the administration of Lord Cromer, as his title now was, I was completely staggered hy the extraordinary changes which had taken place in the sixteen years in which I had heen absent.

"When he came to Egypt the value of Egyptian 4 per cent. unifieds was about 45, I think. He leaves Egypt with 3 per cent. stock 100 or over. Land which when he came was difficult of sale at from $80 to $100 is worth anything from $800 to $1,000 now. The taxation of the fellah, which was exorhitant, has heen reduced to moderate dimensions. The fellah, who used to live in rags, now drives about in his carriage and travels first class."

"What other great ruler and reformer do you think could best he compared with Lord Cromer?" was asked.

"There is not a man you could compare him with," said Mr. Bell, emphatically.

"A great deal of his success," he added, "is due to his absolute singleness of purpose and his utter forgetfulness of self. He trained up lots of young men. He invariahly gave each of them some opportunity to distinguish himself. In his valuable reports from Egypt he generally cited some young man as having procured him the whole of the information on the subject treated in the report. On some occasions he would make a report in the name of one of his young men. Every one understood that at the back of that report was Cromer himself, hiding himself and trying to imhue the young man with his astonishing perspicacity.

"On one occasion I asked him whether he thought that one of our public officials, who was going out to govern a portion of the empire, was likely to make a success. He said: 'Yes, if he will do as I have done.' I said: 'What do you mean?' He said: 'When I came to Egypt I made up my mind that the work was big enough for the life of one man, and that I would devote my life to it and not ask promotion or take promotion until I had made it a complete success. Now "X." can do quite as well as I did, only possihly in five years he will be thinking of coming home to get some other appointment.'

"Lord Cromer received offers of several appointments of far greater outward appearance. Among them he received an offer of a position in the Cahinet. In every case he refused. His one work was Egypt, to that he devoted his life, and he is the creator of the Egypt that we see to-day."

In the early part of Lord Cromer's Egyptian career, Mr. Bell said, his character and aims were not so well appreciated.

"He was generally supposed," said Mr. Bell, "to be of a very masterful disposition, and when he came out to Egypt somebody publiahed the following verse:

The virtue of patience is known;
But I think, were one put to the touch,
The people in Egypt will own with a groan
There's evil in Baring too much.

"As a matter of fact," added Mr. Bell, "he is the most gentle and kindly hearted man possible."

In speaking of Lord Cromer's successor, Mr. Bell said: "Naturally, after what I have said, it is to be understood that Lord Cromer is an extremely difficult person to follow, but it is hoped that Sir Eldon Gorst will rise to the situation."

DEFENDS UNION PACIFIC.

Editor of The Statist Says Its Properties Are Going Up in Value.

Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

LONDON, April 12.—George Paish, editor of The Statist, has sent out the advance proofs of an article on the Union Pacific Railroad, which he has prepared for publication to-morrow. He thinks that amid the storm of controversy in regard to the investments of the Union Pacific it is desirable to distinguish the facts from the mist and haze of discussion.

"The essential facts," says Mr. Paish, "are that the company possesses a railway of very great value, earning large profits, and possesses an immense amount of securities of high class which yield a large income, and the value of which is going up. Its property and investments are worth far more than the capitalized value.

"In fact, were the courts to order the Union Pacific to dispose of its investments, their sale, even at the ourrent prices, would mean a handsome bonus in one shape or another to the stockholders. Although there would be no difficulty in realizing on the investments, doubtless they would neither be distributed in kind to the stcokholders nor sold in the market. An investment company would probably be formed to take them over, but, in what ever way the securities were disposed of, a very large profit would accrue to the stockholders."

Mr. Paish goes into a length statistical argument in support of this thesis and in conclusion remarks:

"Whatever happens, it is evident that the Union Pacific stockholders will hold a valuable property. It is clear in the turmoil of agitation that has surrounded Union Pacific in the last few months, that its strong position as a railroad and the great value of its free assets have become overshadowed."

CAN'T HURRY IN ENGLAND.

Young Woman from Here Tries to Get Married at Once.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 12.—A stylishly dressed and very pretty young woman who said she came from New York, burst into Consul General Wynne's office to-day and startled Mr. Wynne by announcing that she must get married without an hour's delay.

The woman went on to say that she had come to London to meet a Russian from St. Petersburg whom she was to marry. She expected to start at once on a honeymoon trip around the world.

She was disgusted when Mr. Wynne told her it would he more than two weeks before she could be married in England unless she was willing to pay the Archbishop of Canterbury for a special license, to obtain which would require forty-eight hours. She stamped her foot, and, declaring that she would find a quicker way, left the office hurriedly. She declined to give her name.

READY TO INVADE PERSIA.

Russian Troops Assembling on the Frontier—A Press Censorship.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 12.—Advices from the Caucasus say that Russia is assembling a body of troops on the Persian frontier for a demonstration, which, it is thought, will soon he necessary.

Newspaper correspondents are not allowed to telegraph news of the movements of troops, but it is known that twenty railroad cars loaded with artillery and three regiments of Cossacks passed through Kars on their way south last week.

The Russian diplomats describe the condition of Persia as complete chaos, but they hope that the moral effect produced hy the massing of troops on the frontier will be sufficient to enable the Shah to take the necessary steps to restore order without an actual invasion.

The dissolution of the Persian National Assembly may he necessary, it is said.

KAISER SEES BEERBOHM TREE

English Actor and His Company Open a Season in Berlin.

BERLIN, April 12.—Beerbohm Tree, with his stock company from His Majesty's Theatre, London, opened to-night in a series of Shakespeare's plays at the New Opera House. At the conclusion of the play to-night Mr. Tree was received hy the Emperor, who wore the uniform of an English General. His Majesty congratulated Mr. Tree upon his masterly performance, and discussed Shakespeare with him at length. OLIVE BRANCH FROM Ppremier TO DUMA

Stolypin Writes to Golovin that He Hopes for Parliament's Co-operation.

A STORM IN THE HOUSE

Minister of Justice's Demand for Exclusion of Three Socialist Deputies Causes Intense Resentment.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 12.—Simultaneously with his official letter threatening to use the police to keep strangers out of the Duma, Premier Stolypin sent a private letter to M. Golovin, President of the lower house, couched in the most courteous terms and recommending that, if it were absolutely necessary to examine experts, the meetings should he arranged in private apartments. The Premier said he had no objection to this method, but he considered the presence of private persons in the Duma to he illegal.

The Premier's private letter covers four pages and is considered to be a step toward bringing about a more intimate understanding hetween the Cabinet and Parliament. The official communication shows the maintenance of a firm attitude of supervision, while the private letter extends the olive branch of peace. In this letter the Premier clearly expresses the opinion that there is no reason for a further straining of the relations between the Government and the Duma and distinctly voices the hope that they will be able to co-operate. This is the first time Premier Stolypin has expressed any solicitude regarding the fate of the Duma.

It being considered that the nature of this letter required the maintenance of secrecy, M. Golovin did not divulge its contents, even to the Vice-Presidents of the House. This secrecy is dictated to some extent by the necessity of preventing intrigues on the part of the enemies of the Duma. Premier Stolypin's official letter will be answered to-morrow.

A demand for the exclusion from Parliament of three Socialist Deputies, pending their trial for political offenses, submitted to the lower house of Parliament by the Minister of Justice, M. Chtohegiovitoff, at to-day's session caused an outburst of excitement and indignation. The prosecutions of the Deputies have been instituted in the provincial courts for acts committed hefore the convocation of Parliament.

Two of the men, L. F. Gerue, a teacher and Social Revolutionist of Kuban, and A. A. Kuznetsoff, a Social Democrat of Simbirsk, are accused of being Socialists and therefore members of a party contemplating the overthrow of the State. The third, A. S. Kupstas, a peasant landowner of Kevna, who was returned as a member of the Left Party, is charged with making revolutionary speeches.

The Constitutional Democrats, who were anxious to avoid a heated discussion on the floor, proposed to refer the Minister's demand to a committee, but the Socialists and Social Revolutionists insisted on an immediate, flat refusal in order to place the House on record against the classification as crimes of such acts as the three Deputies are charged with committing.

M. Alexinsky, a Social Democrat of St. Petersburg, in an excited speech, pointed out that a recognition of the Minister's right to demand the Deputies' exclusion might lead to the exclusion of a third of the membership of the House.

The Minister of Justice defended his demand. He said the law clearly provided for the temporary suspension of Deputies indicted for criminal acts. The House, he insisted, had no discretion in the matter, and he further asserted that the Russian courts were above suspicion, a statement which was greeted with ironical laughter.

M. Chteglovitoff's remarks were blunt and uncompromising and provoked a series of fiery answers, which roused the house into the first great excitement of the present session. Even the Constitutional Democrats were swept off their feet, the rule closing the sitting at 6 o'clock was suspended, and the house shook with applause as speaker after speaker denounced the Russian judicial system as being a travesty of justice.

M. Teslinko, a Constitutional Democrat of Moscow, declared that for forty years the Ministers of Justice had heen tearing out pages from the code of Russian laws until nothing hut the covers remained. The prosecuting attorneys, he added, were graduates of gendarme offices, and the Judges creatures of the present régime.

M. Azemoff, Constitutional Democrat, referred to the fact that in the indictment of M. Kuznetsoff he was classed as a revolutionist. Turning dramstically to the Minister of Justice, M. Azemoff asked whether Russia was still an autocracy, "for if so the manifesto of Oct. 30 was a lie, and if not, then the defenders of the autocracy are the real revolutionists."

M. Alexinsky proposed that troops be brought in to arrest the Deputies and thereby complete the humiliation of Parliament.

The Constitutional Democratic resolution to refer the demand of the Minister of Justice to a committee, which was opposed hy both the Socialists and the Government, was carried hy 197 to 175 votes.

On account of the increasing mass of committee work, a resolution abolishing morning sessions was adopted. The House in future will commence husiness at 2 P. M.

The Marshals of Nohility from thirty-two provinces are holding a congress in St. Petershurg hehind closed doors. To-day they decided to request the Cahinet and the Emperor to close the universities, and it is expected that they will petition the Emperor to dissolve the lower house of Parliament.

The United Nohility is an ultra-reactionary organization, whose representatives at Court compose the famous "Star Chamber." Documents recently published hy Prince Paul Dolgorukoff prove that this organization defeated the efforts of Premier Stolypin last August to make Count Heyden, Prince Lvoff, and Dmitri Shipoff, members of the Cabinet.

TERRORIST OR BORROWER?

Man in Faulty Uniform Arrested at Grand Duke's House in Paris.

PARIS, April 12.—A supposed Terrorist who was arrested on Wednesday at the residence of the Grand Duke Alexis of Russia in the Avenue Gabriel, where he called several times in the uniform of a naval officer, proves to be a man named Zelisch Milan, a native of Austria. He had a false Russian passport and a student's card of a Parisian Faculty in his possession. The Grand Duke was absent each time the man called. Inaccuracies in the latter's uniform led to the arrest.

When questioned at the Prefecture of Police the prisoner said he was a Russian police official whom the Nihilists had sentenced to death. The police authorities here are convinced that the man simply desired to ohtain pecuniary assistance by means of a fabricated story, and he has heen liherated provisionally.

American Church in Paris Robbed.

PARIS, April 12.—The American Church, in the Rue de Berri, was entered by burglars last night. All the collection boxes were ransacked and a number of articles were stolen.

CHOATE AND PORTER HEAD PEACE ENVOYS

U. M. Rose, David J. Hill, Gen. Davis, Admiral Sperry, and W. I. Buchanan Also Named.

M. NELIDOFF MAY PRESIDE

Heads Russian Delegation to Conference—Powers Still Negotiating About Armament Limitation.

WASHINGTON, April 12.—At the conclusion of the Cabinet meeting to-day, the personnel of the American delegates to The Hague Peace Conference was announced. Owing to the growing importance of the approaching congress and the extension of the programme, the number of delegates has been slightly increased. The American delegates will be:

JOSEPH H. CHOATE, ex-Ambassador to Great Britain.

Gen. HORACE PORTER, ex-Ambassador to France.

U. M. ROSE of Arkansas, ex-President of the American Bar Association and now President of the Arkansas Bar Association.

DAVID JAYNE HILL, American Minister to the Netherlands and ex-Professor of International Law at Rochester University.

Brig. Gen. GEORGE B. DAVIS, Judge Advocate General, U. S. A., and formerly Professor of International Law at the United States Military Academy.

Rear Admiral CHARLES S. SPERRY, U. S. N., President of the Naval War College.

WILLIAM I. BUCHANAN, formerly Minister to the Argentine Republic and to Panama, and Chairman of the American delegation to the Rio Conference.

Secretary—CHANDLER HALE of Maine, son of Senator Hale, and formerly Secretary of the American Embassy at Vienna.

Expert in International Law—JAMES BROWN SCOTT, Solicitor of the Department of State.

Expert Attaché—CHARLES HENRY BUTLER, Reporter of the United States Supreme Court.

The delegates will sail from New York for The Hague about the middle of May.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 12.—Russia to-day officially named as her delegates to the Peace Conference at The Hague M. Nelidoff, Ambassador to France; Prof. de Martens, Imperial Councilor of State, and M. Tcharykoff, the Russian Minister at The Hague. M. Nelidoff, as the first of the Russian delegates, will, it is expected, be chosen as President of the conference, and in his opening address he will explain the Russian programme.

The attitude of the powers on the subject of the discussion of the limitation of armaments and questions as to naval war not touched upon in the Russian note on the subject is not fully defined. A most active interchange of dispatches between Vienna, Berlin, and St. Petersburg is still in progress.

Notwithstanding her French ties, Russia is evidently acting fully in sympathy with her Germanic neighbors.

PARIS, April 12.—Ministerial circles here have not taken up a definite attitude relative to the question of discussing the limitation of armaments at The Hague Conference, or at least they maintain reserve on the subject.

Semi-official advices received here from Berlin and Vienna are to the effect that Germany and Austria are utterly opposed to the Italian proposition, the object of which was to conciliate the German and British viewpoints.

FAULTS OF FRENCH FLEET.

Senatorial Commission Finds a Great Lack of Cohesion.

TOULON, April 12.—The Senatorial Commission appointed to investigate the cause of the explosion on the battleship Iéna March 3, when over 100 of the crew were killed, and to report on the naval situation generally, has terminated its work and drawn up a long report for presentation to Parliament. The commission examined a large number of witnesses and has reached the conclusion that there is a great lack of cohesion in the various branches of the fleet and want of organization in its supervision.

From the evidence heard the members of the commission consider that the explosion on the Iéna was due to the decomposition of "B" powder.

CAN'T PROTECT JASSY JEWS.

Prefect Advises Them to Emigrate—Roumania Outwardly Tranquil.

BUCHAREST, April 12.—In spite of the fact that the country is tranquil and under military rule, the peasant agitation still smolders. Anti-Semitic feeling is so strong in the Jassy district that the Jews there sent a deputation to the Prefect of Jassy begging for protection.

The Prefect's answer is worthy of note; he declared his powerlessness to protect the Jews, advised them to emigrate before they were expelled hy force hy the peasants, and assured them that the Government would facilitate their emigration.

The Gazette to-day publishes the official thanks of King Charles to the army for the unhesitating manner in which it fulfilled its duties during the recent riots. His Majesty says the fact that 145,000 men were mohilized within five days constitutes a powerful guarantee that the army will always he ahle to face any danger threatening the State.

BELGIAN CABINET RESIGNS.

New Ministry Not to be Formed Till the King Returns.

BRUSSELS, April 12.—The Chamher of Deputies to-day adopted the measure fixing the hours of labor in mines hy 94 votes to 32, after which M. de Smet de Nayer, the Premier, announced that the Cahinet, being unable to command a majority in the House, had decided to resign.

The formation of a new Ministry will not he undertaken until the return of King Leopold from the Riviera, and the Chamber accordingly adjourned until further notice.

In political circles it is thought that Baron Deschamps will be the new Premier.

5,000 DIE DAILY BY CHINESE FAMINE

Graves Rifled of Bodies—Parents Exchange Children to be Eaten.

CORPSES LIE BY ROADSIDE

Relief Funds Nearing Exhaustion—$1 Will Save a Life Until the Harvest—$10,000,000 Needed.

SHANGHAI, April 12.—Telegrams received here from twenty points in the famine district report that the conditions are growing worse. Probably 5,000 persons are dying daily from starvation.

Cannihalism is beginning to be reported. Newly made graves have been rifled of the hodies, and parents are exchanging their children to be esten.

The members of the Relief Committee at the front report that they find the bodies of the sufferers with faces turned green or black as the result of starvation. The people are pulling up the growing crops for food. Whole families have been found dead in their houses, and corpses are seen lying by the roadside.

The Chinese Government and people up to date have contributed over $4,000,000 for famine relief, and the sums received from all foreign sources total $500,000, including the supplies on their way here from America. The Chinese Viceroy and Governor telegraphed to-day to the American Consul, Mr. Rodgers, their thanks for the relief sent. They say that it is dissipating the anti-foreign sentiment which has animated the masses.

Fifty missionaries with the higher class of Chinese are engaged in overseeing the relief distribution. Confucianists, Catholics, and Protestants are working together. The telegraph officials are carrying free all messages to and from the relief works, and the steamship companies are furnishing free transportation for supplies of food, &c., intended for the sufferers.

Twenty thousand famine sufferers are employed in building dams and canals to prevent a recurrence of the floods.

The Relief Committee here is promptly sending supplies to the front, hut the funds are nearing exhaustion. All the relief measures adopted up to date are inadequate. Ten million persons are suffering from inadequate supplies of food, and 3,000,000 are nearing starvation.

A dollar, the Relief Committee reports, will save one life until the harvest, June 25, and $10,000,000 is needed. The whole smonnt cannot he raised in China. The situation is desperate, and Americans are urged to give $3,000,000 in the next three weeks.

It is suggested that it would he hest to cable money to the American Consul here, James Linn Rodgers, as supplies can be purchased in Shanghai.

TRIES TO SWALLOW AN EGG.

Minister Saves Little Girl in Sunday School Class from Choking.

Special to The New York Times.

SAYVILLE, L. I., April 12.—A small girl, an Easter egg, and an appetite which waited upon neither place nor time disrupted a Sunday school class of the Seventh Day Adventists' Church here. The Rev. Dr. C. H. Martin was conscientiously leading his small flock through the mazes of intelligent Bible study when he noticed a tiny girl in the front row industriously trying to dispose of an Easter egg in her mouth.

The egg was too large for the small girl's mouth, hut even as Dr. Martin vaulted the pulpit and altar rail and dashed toward the youngster, the egg disappeared in a happy gurgle. An instant later, however, the poy fled from the child's face and in its place came a look of pained surprise. The small mouth which had closed so lingeringly over the tempting morsel opened abruptly and the youngster omitted a piercing shriek.

Dr. Martin, however, had already grabbed the child and rushed with her into the open air. There her screams gave place to a choking spasm. Quickly then she became blue in the face, while Dr. Martin worked energetically to save her. The minister thumped the child upon the back and stood her upon her head, shaking her. Around him in terrified silence gathered the rest of the flock. At last, after a final thump, the child ceased to choke, and she sighed with relief as the egg slipped from the place where it had lodged in her throat.

Dr. Martin led the flock back to church and continued the lesson, after turning the small patient over to Dr. Ross.

MR. CARNEGIE, ILL, STAYS IN ALL DAY

But Recovers from Fatigue and Excitement Sufficiently to Attend Banquet at Night.

W. T. STEAD MAKES A HIT

His Plan for $100,000 Peace Pilgrimage Fund Greeted with Cheers and Showers of Money.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 12.—Andrew Carnegie was ill in his room to-day, and his indisposition disarranged the plans for the second day's exercises in the opening of the new Carnegie Institute Building. He was able, however, to attend the banquet to-night. There is nothing serious the matter. Mr. Carnegie is simply worn out by the fatigue and excitement of the last few days. The morning's programme, or a good deal of it, had to be omitted, and part of it was jammed into the afternoon programme. The guests went from the lecture hall, where the morning addresses were to have been delivered, into the hall of music to witness the presentation of addresses by universities.

In the afternoon William T. Stead made the hit of the day, and the biggest hit so far made by any one here except Mr. Carnegie. After explaining the plan of the pilgrimage from all countries to the next Hague Conference, advocated in a recent address in New York, he estimated that it would take at least $100,000 to defray the expenses. To raise this sum he proposed that every boy and girl in colleges and universities throughout the United States donate 50 cents toward the fund needed. He said the lesson furnished to Europe by such a movement would be an influential factor in the quest of international peace.

Mr. Stead sat down amid loud applause. For fully five minutes the applause and cheering were prolonged, and finally the speaker again arose, and said that probably the audience would like to contribute to the fund. Immediately a shower of silver money landed on the stage, coming from all parts of the music hall.

Denounces Yellow Journalism.

During his speech Mr. Stead denounced yellow journalism, and was continually interrupted by frantic applause, but it was noticed that when he said a qualifying word or two in favor of the liberty of the press and of reputable newspapers there was no applause at all. The impression gained was that the audience was not much better pleased with reputable newspapers than with yellow ones.

Stead's proposal to put yellow editors in prison for fomenting ill-feeling between nations was enthusiastically applauded. At one point he quoted a German statesman as saying to him that the first step toward abolishing war was to hang about ten editors, and that the speaker would begin with the editor of the Cologne Gazette, and then hang the editor of The London Times. Some persons even applauded this sentiment.

The falling off in the crowd was very remarkable to-day. There was no difficulty in getting into the hall, with or without tickets, and there were many vacant seats. The platform where the distinguished guests were seated was only about half filled, and many of them left while the exercises were going on. In the afternoon the lobby of the Schenley was practically deserted.

Booker Washington is a popular man here. He is applauded whenever he appears on the stage of the music hall and whenever his name is mentioned. The interest in the Germans has subsided to a considerable extent, and one does not hear so much of them as heretofore.

The first thing the guests did this morning was to visit the Carnegie Technical Schools, where they spent an hour, then the morning addresses having been omitted, they went to the music hall, and the addresses were presented. Here the honors in the way of applause were carried off by Booker Washington, and President Hadley of Yale. After this the guests were taken out in automobiles and treated to a view of Pittsburg's residence district. They took luncheon at the Country Club, and then returned to the Institute for the afternoon exercises.

These began with an organ selection by Charles Heinroth, the new organist. The speeches here were by Sir Robert S. Ball, Director of the Cambridge Observatory, on "The Solution of a Great Scientific Difficulty;" Gen. Von Lowenfeld on "German Military Constitutions;" Léonce Bénédite, Director of the Luxembourg Museum in Paris, on "The Mission of an Art Museum;" Sir William Henry Preece, the electrical engineer, on "The Connection Between Science and Engineering;" Ernest Von Ihne, Court Architect to the German Emperor, on "Development of Architectural Style in Germany," and William T. Stead on "The Next Step Toward International Peace."

Sir Robert Ball's address discussed scientific subjects without the slightest technicality and in a way that the laymen in the audience could understand without difficulty. His address was warmly received. M. Bénédite spoke in French and Gen. von Loewenfeld in English. The General, however, does not speak English well.

Praise of Mrs. Carnegie.

A reception was given to Mrs. Carnegie at the Margaret Morrison Carnegie Technical Schools by the wife of Director A. A. Hammerschlag of the technical schools and by the teachers there and the women of Pittsburg. This lasted all the afternoon. The foreign guests who have met Mrs. Carnegie are lavish in their praise of her.

"She is a typical American woman and a typical mother. What more could I say?" was the tribute paid to her by William T. Stead.

Gen. von Loewenfeld said: "I have no wife, and I have no sister, but any man who should possess a Mrs. Carnegie as either should be the happiest of men."

John MacBeth of Dumfermline, Scotland, paid this tribute: "By her sweet disposition and great kindness Mrs. Carnegie wins the hearts of every one with whom she is thrown in contact."

Sir Robert S. Ball expressed himself thus: "Mrs. Carnegie is a fitting wife for such a wonderful man as her husband."

This evening Mr. and Mrs. Carnegie were the guests at a banquet in the Schenley. Mr. Carnegie had so far recovered from his indisposition as to be able to attend. He will not be here for the exercises to-morrow. He will go to New York on the 10 o'clock train, accompanied by Mrs. Carnegie and a private detective, who will go with them as far as Altoona.

No explanation of this action has been given. It recalls the fact that Mr. Carnegie came to Pittsburg twenty-four hours ahead of schedule, arriving in the most unexpected manner and without any one being prepared for his arrival. The suggestion has been made that Mr. Carnegie has received information that the train-wreckers who have been operating in Pittsburg are planning trouble for him, but this is only guesswork. It is a fact that there have been an unusual number of cranks at this affair.

The principal function to-morrow will be the conferring of honorary degrees by the Western University of Pennsylvania upon a number of the distinguished guests.

Those who love to guess this afternoon made the surmise that the bringing of out-of-town visitors to Pittsburg to take part in the Institute dedication cost Andrew Carnegie not less than $100,000. Those who love to figure think $62,400 will pay all bills. "Don't mind the cost," he said to the trustees, when they consulted him regarding the celebration. They heeded him and spared no expense in the effort to gratify his wishes. He is more than pleased, and unquestioningly footed the bill.

A conservative estimate of what the celebration cost Mr. Carnegie is $62,400. When it is taken into consideration that Mr. Carnegie is personally defraying the expenses of all the guests, it will be seen that the figure is, if anything, very low. This is how the cost is figured: Cost of the visit of the trustees to Europe to invite distinguished Europeans, $10,000; round trip steamship fare of forty-five European guests, at $500 each, $22,500; hotels, theatres, carriages, etc., in New York for the fifty-five guests at $20 a day each for an average of five days, $4,500; hotels, carriages, etc., in Pittsburg for 170 guests for three days, at $15 a day each, $7,650; banquet for 200 persons at $10 a plate, $2,000; incidentals, such as the badges, programmes, invitations, banquet menus, etc., $10,000. Total, $62,400.

14,935 PITTSBURGERS SAD.

Only 65 Invited Out of 15,000 Who Wanted to Attend Banquet.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 12.—Although 15,000 people are said to have applied for invitations to the big banquet given to Mr. and Mrs. Carnegie and their guests, both foreign and American, only 80 married men with their wives, four single men, and one New Yorker, Charles Heinroth, the new organist, were selected, and the 14,935 are disappointed. George Westinghouse was the only one of the Chamber of Commerce's distinguished twenty-eight sons recognized by the Carnegie committee. Those invited were:

Miner, financier, and wife, and Thomas Rodd, Chief Engineer of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and wife.

ROCKEFELLER TO CARNEGIE.

Congratulates Him on His "Great and Good" Speech.

PITTSBURG, April 12.—John D. Rockefeller, in a letter to Andrew Carnegie today, congratulated the donor of the Carnegie Institute upon the rededication. The letter follows:

Lakewood, N. J., April 12, 1907.
Andrew Carnegie, Pittsburg, Penn.

Please accept my hearty congratulations on your great and good speech on the dedication of Carnegie Institute in your old home, the City of Pittsburg. It has the right ring. I am with you. You have my best wishes for the success of all your grand efforts to help your fellowmen. I hope and trust that our prosperous men the country over will be stimulated to emulate your noble example. I believe that untold good would result therefrom.

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER.

Mr. Carnegie replied as follows:

John D. Rockefeller, Lakewood, N. J.

Many thanks, fellow-worker, in the task of distributing surplus wealth for the good of others. I clasp your hand. Your congratulations highly valued. ANDREW CARNEGIE.

CRANKS AFTER CARNEGIE.

One Disturbs Banquet — Woman Headed Off—Jail for Man with Knife.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 12.—The Carnegie banquet at the Hotel Schenley to-night was disturbed by an attempt of a powerfully built Italian, said to be Godfrey Frizisonno of Philadelphia, to force his way into the banquet room. The same man was ejected from the Institute yesterday, when he attempted to make a speech. The police hustled him out of the hotel, but did not place him under arrest.

During the last two days a mysterious "woman in black" has made repeated attempts to get a personal interview with Andrew Carnegie, but her every effort has been frustrated by the police. Superintendent of Police McQuaid says that the "woman in black" has been annoying Mr. Carnegie for three years. She imagines that she has painted a great picture which he should buy and hang in the art galleries of the Carnegie Institute. She has called at the Carnegie house in New York many times, and tried to see Mr. Carnegie when he was here a year ago. The police know her name and all about her, but will not divulge her identity. She is regarded as a harmless crank.

Yesterday she made several attempts to get to Mr. Carnegie in the Hotel Schenley, but the police turned her back. Later she tried to get into the Institute. To-day she started for Mr. Lauder's home, where Mr. Carnegie is stopping, but the detective who is following her continually in Pittsburg kept her away.

Frederick Slagel, the German arrested at the entrance to the Hotel Schenley yesterday while trying to force his way in to see Andrew Carnegie in reference to a patent which he said he wanted to dispose of, was sent to jail for five days by Magistrate J. D. Walker at the Oakland Police Station hearing to-day. Slagel spent last night in his cell singing German religious songs, and the police believe he is demented.

Officer Kennedy, who made the arrest, testified that Slagel had an open knife concealed in his sleeve. The prisoner said he came to Pittsburg last Wednesday from Los Angeles, Cal. He had been employed on the farm of Harry Pratt at Sacramento, but had left there three weeks ago.

While he is serving his jail sentence the police will make a further effort to learn additional facts concerning him.

SAYS THERE'S A "DIP TRUST."

Magistrate Higginbotham Declares Pickpockets Are Protected.

Magistrate Higginbotham of the Lee Avenue Court, Brooklyn, who some time ago endeared himself to all sweethearts in that borough by denouncing as an outrage the arrest of a young man for kissing his girl good-night at the gate, strolled out before the spot light again yesterday with the discovery of a "dip trust."

"Dip" is the police term for pickpocket. Three men were before the Magistrate charged with robbing a jeweler on the platform of a street car. He held the prisoners for the Grand Jury, saying:

"Criminals of this class have a trust behind them. They are powerfully protected, and it is about time some action was taken to break up this trust."

UNITED COPPER CO. LOANED TO HEINZES

Firm Could Get $500,000 at a Time from Big Loan Fund.

SETTLEMENT CASH USED

F. A. Heinze Also Testifies He Continually Bought and Sold Stock for United, but Never Speculated.

That $3,000,000 of the $10,500,000 purchase money which the United Copper Company received for the constituent properties sold to Thomas F. Cole and John J. Ryan in the settlement of the United Amalgamated troubles, was used as a fund loanable in Wall Street, out of which the firm of Otto T. Heinze & Co. has at times borrowed as much as $500,000, was admitted by F. Augustus Heinze on the stand in the preliminary hearing in the Hodgens action yesterday. This is the suit which Thomas M. Hodgens, ex-cashier of the State Savings Bank of Butte, and a former Heinze ally, has brought as a stockholder of the United Copper Company in the New Jersey courts to be allowed to make an inspection of the books.

F. A. Heinze was on the witness stand for some eight hours yesterday, under direct examination by the company's counsel, F. J. Faulks of Newark and Sanford Robinson of this city, for most of the morning and afternoon sessions, and under cross-examination by T. J. Walsh, who appears, with William A. Lockwood, for Mr. Hodgens, in the latter part of the afternoon and most of the evening. The cross-examination will continue this morning, and then the proofs taken will be submitted to the New Jersey Supreme Court, for decision as to whether Mr. Hodgens is entitled to an inspection of the United Copper books.

Mr. Heinze's Testimony.

In his direct testimony, Mr. Heinze said that his former associate, after the purchase of the control of the State Savings Bank of Butte by the Heinze interests, managed to get the stock so bought hypothecated, and keeping the management of the institution in his own hands, to use the situation as a club to make the Heinzes submit to all sorts of unjust conditions in their business dealings. A good deal of stress was laid by the respondents upon this theory of the Heinze-Hodgens disputes; the witness explaining that the ability of Mr. Hodgens to do this resulted from the fact that the transfer of the control of the State Savings Bank in 1901 was kept secret because of the warfare waging with the Amalgamated interests.

On cross-examination F. A. Heinze said that "the threats" of his banker were made frequently in the course of pool games and social evenings spent at Hodgens's house or at his own, in which there was no outward sign of trouble to mar the conviviality. To this was added the admission that Hodgens, in the period in which he was making the threats to sell the Heinze notes at the bank to Mr. Ryan as the managing head of the Amalgamated in Montana, had personally raised money from time to time for the Heinze companies, and told the mining man in some instances that it was upon his own personal indorsement.

Thereby hangs part of the $10,500,000 cash that came out of the sale of most of the United Copper's producing properties to the Cole-Ryan combination was traced by F. A. Heinze with the aid of Mr. Walsh, after the witness had refused to state in detail what the money went for after the United received it. Mr. Heinze refused to give the detailed information on the sale of the properties on the ground that it would involve a "breach of faith with third parties." Mr. Walsh inquired if the third parties were the purchasers of the properties or the stockholders of the United Copper Company. Mr. Heinze said it was the purchasers whom he had in mind.

After drawing from the witness a statement that none of the money received from the sale was used either by the United Copper or its constituent companies to pay dividends, Mr. Walsh tried to find out what it was used for, so far as was compatible with Mr. Heinze's ideas of keeping faith with the purchasers. Incidental to this line of inquiry, the President of the United Copper Company said that he kept himself thoroughly informed of the affairs of the company and its constituent properties to determine whether the United had actually a controlling interest in any of them or not. Mr. Heinze said that the Montana Ore Purchasing Company was the principal subsidiary of the United that was still conducting operations since the sale to the Cole-Ryan interests.

Properties Inactive at Present.

"Are any of the other properties conducting operations?" demanded Mr. Walsh.

"No," said the witness, "not at the present time."

"Have any been since the sale?"

"Not of an active character."

The Montana Ore Purchasing, it appeared, had been engaged in the purchase and sale of securities before the settlement with the Amalgamated, including securities in all of the constituent properties of the Amalgamated, "as a matter of strategy." Mr. Heinze would not say what other securities it had bought and sold, either before or after the deal with Cole and Ryan, on the ground that it would be detrimental to disclose such enterprises conducted on behalf of the United. But he admitted that a part of the proceeds of the sale of the other constituent properties had been used in the purchase and sale of securities since the settlement. Then some interesting testimony came out, although Mr. Heinze still would not say what any of the stocks bought or sold might be.

"When were these investments made?" asked Mr. Walsh.

"Continually," said the witness, "almost daily from the time of the sale."

"So you are buying and selling securities daily with your $10,000,000?" remarked Mr. Walsh.

"Not daily," replied Mr. Heinze, but when there is a chance to buy at less than we think a security is worth or to sell at more than it looks to be worth to us."

"Do you mean that you have been speculating in stocks with this money?" demanded the Hodgens lawyer.

"Oh, no," rejoined the President of the United Copper Company, "as I explained, I bought when I thought a favorable opportunity was offered and sold under similar conditions."

"And have the subsidiary companies of the United Copper been doing the same thing."

"Yes," was the reply.

"And the Montana Ore Purchasing?"

"Yes."

Mr. Heinze said that the purchases were made by him or by his brother, A. P. Heinze, but in the latter case usually at his suggestion.

"So you are practically the whole United Copper Company," Mr. Walsh observed.

"I shouldn't say so," replied Heinze. "I am a large stockholder, the holder of perhaps 10,000 shares of the preferred and 7,500 shares of the common stock."

Then the examination was turned to the Wall Street loans made out of the proceeds of the sale of the United's properties. It continued:

Loans in Wall Street.

Q.—In addition some of the money was loaned out on call? A.—It was.

Q.—Here in New York? A.—Yes.

Q.—And the subsidiary companies did it? A.—Yes.

Q.—To whom were the loans made? A.—Through brokers in the Street.

Q.—Yes, but to whom? Were they made to any one connected with the United Copper Company? A.—Some of them, and some were made to Tom, Dick, and Harry.

Q.—To whom connected with the United Copper Company were any loans made? A.—Some loans were made—perhaps it was not quite correct to say parties connected with the United Copper Company; I had in mind Otto T. Heinze & Co.

Q.—Is Otto Heinze your brother? A.—Yes.

Q.—And A. P. Heinze, Vice President of the United, is a partner in his firm? A.—He is.

Q.—And the United Copper Company and Otto T. Heinze & Co. occupy adjoining offices at 42 Broadway and use the same entrance? A.—Yes. They split up the rent.

Q.—How extensive were the loans to Otto T. Heinze & Co.? A.—Well, call loans are a matter of such a temporary character and the security is such that one who doesn't wish to continue the loan can practically get out of it so rapidly that it is a very temporary affair, and varies from day to day.

Q.—Who passes on the security of such loans to Otto T. Heinze & Co.? A.—Either I or Arthur P. Heinze.

Q.—Is there any one else connected with the United Copper Company who has got money on call loans from it? A.—I don't recall. Of course the books would show the various loans made, as well as the investments in the stocks of these companies.

Q.—They would show the United Company's investments, and, in the case of the loans, a memorandum of the securities held? A.—Yes.

"Now," demanded Mr. Walsh, "how much of the funds of the United Copper Company has been out on call loans at any time?"

"In excess of $3,000,000," said Mr. Heinze.

"And what is the largest amount that Otto H. Heinze & Co. have ever borrowed from the United Company?"

"I don't know," said the witness, "but I don't recall anything in excess of $500,000."

"Have you now told us of everybody connected with the United Copper Company to whom any loans have been made in the last year?" persisted the lawyer.

"Yes," was the reply.

Loans to Officers of the Company.

"Will the books of the company show any loans in the last year to any officers of the company other than A. P. Heinze?"

"Well, said F. A. Heinze reflectively, "I may say that perhaps there have been some small temporary loans of say $15,000 or $20,000 or $30,000 or $40,000 to Mr. Gifford, and the balances of the subsidiary companies or of the United Copper Company itself may have been carried in the bank under my personal name, but I will say that no loans of any material amount have been made."

"What do you call a small loan?"

"Oh, anything up to $50,000," said the witness.

Referring to earlier testimony of Mr. Heinze that he devoted practically all his time to the United Copper Company, Mr. Walsh asked him if he was not President of the Mercantile National Bank and a Director in several other banks. The reply was in the affirmative, and Mr. Heinze remarked that he was drawing no salary as President of the Mercantile National and was devoting very little time to the bank.

"And you are also familiarizing yourself with the affairs of the State Savings Bank of Butte?"

"I am," replied the witness.

"And with the Silver Bow National Bank of Butte?"

"Yes."

"Then how does it happen that you devote all your time to the United Copper Company, when you find time for all these other interests?"

"I devote practically all my time to the United Copper Company," said Mr. Heinze, "and when I say that, I mean that it might be to the interest of the United Copper Company to keep in touch with the other corporations."

"And it might be in the interest of the Mercantile National Bank for you to keep in touch with the United Copper Company?"

"Well," said Mr. Heinze, "the United Copper Company might be a large stockholder in the Mercantile National Bank."

But Mr. Walsh was not quite done with the matter of the loans. He asked if there was any difference between those which had been referred to as call loans and those which were entitled loans on collateral.

"Most of the United Copper Company's loans have been call loans," said Mr. Heinze, "although others have been made for insignificant amounts with the understanding that they were to be paid at some definite time."

"And by insignificant amounts you mean a little matter of two or three millions like Mr. Harriman?" inquired Mr. Walsh.

"No," said the witness, "I wouldn't say that. I mean more than $100,000 or perhaps not more than $50,000."

Purchase of Butte Bank.

In his direct examination Mr. Heinze devoted a good deal of time to telling his side of the transactions that included his purchase of the control of the State Savings Bank of Butte from Mr. Hodgens and the latter's eventual retirement from that institution. Much of this testimony had to do with the charges against Mr. Hodgens growing out of his management of that institution, which are already matters of record in the suit instituted in the Federal Courts here and have figured from time to time in the Heinze defense against the attempt that Hodgens is making to examine the books of the United Copper Company. But there was some interesting matter in the account that the copper man gave of the sale of the bank stock.

Mr. Heinze said that the sale was consummated on Nov. 2, 1901, and that Mr. Hodgens persuaded him to give back the certificates of bank stock to serve as collateral for notes that represented a part of the purchase money. The transfer of the bank's control was not, however, disclosed at that time on account of the row with the Amalgamated, and it was this, according to Mr. Heinze, that gave Hodgens a chance to use the peculiar position in which the control of the bank lay, as a club in their various dealings.

But the intimidation of the man who was meantime fighting the Amalgamated so vigorously did not stop with the release of the bank stock as collateral for the purchase money notes. It appeared from Mr. Heinze's testimony that subsequently when the opposing faction in Butte was negotiating the run on the State Savings Bank, Hodgens demanded that the stock should be put up again as collateral for some of the loans of the Heinze companies and for some of Heinze's personal loans, and then, according to the witness, came around at different times covering a period of two or three years and told about negotiating with Mr. Ryan for the sale of the notes and his own holdings of United Copper stock. Meantime, said Mr. Heinze, Mr. Hodgens never rendered any real reports of his conduct of the bank's affairs, and in the last year before his retirement repeatedly refused to allow a representative of the Heinze interest to examine the books of the institution.

This led up to the account of how things stood when the Heinze people finally got control, on which the complaint in the action against Mr. Hodgens is based. It did not appear to have impressed Mr. Heinze that the Board of Directors had examined the bank and indorsed Mr. Hodgens's management upon his retirement; on the other hand, the copper man said that Mr. Hodgens controlled the Board of Directors, and engineered the examination of the bank and the indorsement of his management.

Mr. Walsh wanted to know some more about this coertion when he came to the cross-examination. He started by asking when the threats were made of which the witness testified.

"I remember that some of them were made evenings when Mr. Hodgens used to come down to play pool at my rooms and tell me about his negotiations with Mr. Ryan," said Heinze.

"Those were pleasant evenings?" queried Mr. Walsh.

"Oh, yes, I had nothing else to do but look pleasant with the fight on as it was," replied Heinze.

Mr. Heinze said that he finally got his bank stock back on paying $150,000 in settlement of some obligations, but he did not remember just which ones.

"Of course," remarked Mr. Walsh, "you were in all this time unable to liquidate this obligation and get out from under this club that he held over you."

"Not necessarily so," said Mr. Heinze. "If I kept in touch with Mr. Hodgens and his negotiations with Mr. Ryan, I could tell how matters stood."

"But what I am trying to get at," said Mr. Walsh, "is why you didn't go elsewhere."

"It would have been embarrassing," said Mr. Heinze, "and I thought that I was safe enough so long as I kept in touch with the negotiations that Mr. Hodgens was having with Mr. Ryan."

Subsequently it appeared that when certain of the Heinze notes were sold, it was with Heinze's consent. The witness also testified that Mr. Hodgens sometimes raised money for the Montana Ore Purchasing Company in these years.

Meetings With Mr. Hodgens.

"Now, isn't it a fact," said Mr. Walsh in closing the subject, "that you repeatedly went to Hodgens's house even at night to get him to aid you in those times of stress?"

"I think," said the witness, "that our relations were such that we frequently visited each other's house, and naturally would discuss the matters that were of interest to both of us."

Mr. Heinze submitted in connection with his direct examination yesterday a compilation of figures such as have appeared in the annual statement of the United Copper Company, showing that the income of the company for 1906, in which $3,450,000 was paid in dividends, was made up as follows:

Interest on bonds	$49,500
Dividends on securities held	2,395,970
Profits on securities held and from contracts	2,504,000
Interest on loans	224,816
Total	$5,174,886

Against this was charged expenses of $333,515, leaving a net income of $4,840,771, but it appeared that of the income for the year $1,700,000 was on account of "variation in the market value of securities held." The income account for the five years of the company's existence showed income of $10,566,928, and total expenses of $398,997, making the expenses of the United Copper Company proper about $16,000 a year prior to 1906. This was explained by the fact that the subsidiary companies here most of the cost of the litigation in which the Heinzes have been involved with the Amalgamated. It was also put in evidence yesterday that the United Copper Company received $2,203,730 in dividends from the Montana Ore Purchasing Company in 1906.

LIKENS HUGHES TO PONTIUS PILATE

Ex-Justice Hatch Intimates that He Would Remove Kelsey in Response to Clamor.

BIDS SENATORS BEWARE

Says Retribution Will Come from the Public if Insurance Commissioned Is Deposed.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 12.—In an impassioned appeal, in which he compared Gov. Hughes to a modern Pontius Pilate and Otto Kelsey to his victim, ex-Justice Edward W. Hatch, chief counsel for the Superintendent of Insurance, to-day closed the defense for Mr. Kelsey in the case of the Governor's recommendation that h be removed from office.

"Once there was a man," said Mr. Hatch, "a man of power. His name was Pontius Pilate. Pilate led out Jesus Cbrist befors the multituds. 'I find no fault with this man,' he said. 'There is no wrong in him.' And that multitude answered and cried: 'Crucify him! Crucify him!' You have before you on trial today a man of whom it has been said: 'Here is a man who has dons no wrong. Here is a man, there is no wrong in him.' He is led before you for judgment. Are yon going to cry 'Crucify him! Crucify him!' If you do, I warn you to beware of the consequences. Retribution will come to you from ths public. I say, beware!"

The final day of the Kelsey hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee began with a number of officials of the insurance companies on the stand. These witnesses, led on by Kelsey's counsel, gave testimony to show tnat the State Superintendent of Insurance, after the San Francisco disaster, had through tactful management, steered them successfully past the dangers growing out of the heavy drafts on their resonrces from the stricken city, and thus averted a catastrophe in the fire insurance world. At the close of their testimony they filed a statement with the Judiciary Committee which was a glowing tribute to Mr. Kelsey.

Ex-Justice Hatch used the entire afternoon in summing up. In the course of his address he said:

"I know that the Governor of this State is an able lawyer and an honest man. I do not impugn his integrity, any more than he impugns the integrity of Superintendent Kelsey. But Governors are not infallible. They are men, and when they assume the Gubernatorial duties and powers it does not mean the immediate descent upon them of all insight into administrative and business affairs. The Governor was mistaken—honestly, no doubt, but, nevertheless, mistaken—with regard to the administration of Mr. Kelsey in the Department of Insurance.

"Supt. Kelsey not only comprehended his duty, not only showed capacity, initiative and force, in spite of Gov. Hughes's belief to the contrary; but he also had judgment and courage. He went to Gov. Higgins with his great problems, and laid them before him. He told him he would have to keep Hunter and Vanderpoel, and Gov. Higgins agreed with him. Gov. Hughes now disagrees with the judgment of Gov. Higgins and Supt. Kelsey."

The Judiciary Committee will consider ths case in secret session on Wednesday. It is stated on good authority to-night that if Kelsey's friends on the committee have their way, the printed testimony of the case with the message from Gov. Hughes recommending his removal will be submitted to the full Senate without any recommendation from the committee whatsoever.

This would necessarily mean a prolonged debate on the floor of the Senate, and incidentally delay much greater than if the committee itself had sifted the testimony and submitted its findings to the Senate.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY IGNORED.

Hughes Directs Jackson to Prosecute Clinton County Saloon Men.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 12.—Attorney General Jackson was requested to-day by Gov. Hughes to appear in person or by deputy before the Supreme Court in Clinton County to attend the prosecution of several alleged liquor tax law violations. Mr. Jackson will taks the place of the District Attorney of the County.

Clinton is the home County of John F. O'Brien, Secretary of State under the late Gov. Higgins.

APPEAL TO GOV. HUGHES.

He Is Asked to Urge Passage of Anti-Ractrack Betting Bills.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 12.—The Rev. A. S. Gregg, Field Secretary of ths International Reform Bureau, to-day sent an appeal to Gov. Hugbes asking him to urge upon the Legislature the passage of the Jerome bills directed against race track gambling. There are two of these bills which were introduced at ths request of District Attorney Jerome early in the session.

Several hearings havs been held before ths Codes Committees of the Senate and Assembly at whicb a number of clergymen have appeared and urged that the bills be passed. The measures nevertbeless have been permitted to slumber in committee, and there seems to be little chance that the legislation asked for will be enacted at this session.

A similar measure was defeated at the last session, because the agricultural societies of the State which have received a certain percentage of the race track revenues feared that they would loose this and apposed the bill for that reason. That is very much tbe situation now.

NATIONAL GUARD CHANGES.

Nine Regiments Are Broken Up Into Twelve Companies.

ALBANY, April 12.—In general orders No. 16, issued to-night from the Adjutant General's Department, it is announced that by command of the Governor, nine regiments of the National Guard are constituted twelve company regiments, in order to conform to the tactical organization of the United States Army. The regiments affected are:

The Twenty-second Regiment Engineers; the Seventh, Ninth, Twelfth, Sixty-ninth, and Seventy-first of New York City; the Tenth, which is composed of up-State separate companies; the Twenty-third of Brooklyn, and the Seventy-fourth of Buffalo, all of which are infantry organizations. The additional companies necessary to complete a twelve-company organization in these regiments are not to be organized at present; but the organization will be ready in case the regiments should be ordered into the United States service.

SUPPLY BILL REPORTED.

Committee Eliminates Item Providing for a Consulting Engineer.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 12.—The annual Supply bill was reported to the Assembly this morning hy the Ways and Means Committee. Two changes interested the House exceedingly. One showed that the Wadsworth House machine had gripped the hill and throttled the pet plan of Superintendent of Public Works Stevens for an appropriation of $12,000 wherewith to employ a consulting engineer, with supervisory powers, in connection with the barge canal plans sent from the Canal Advisory Board.

Tbis "joker" in the Supply bill was mentioned first by Engineer Skene. He believed it inimical to his interests and declared it would tend only to retard progress on the canal. The House machine, though not loving Skene, loves Stevens less, and ripped out the item.

The bill will go to ths Senate in its amended sbape, and it is believed that in the Senate Mr. Stevens and some of the friends of the Administration will cause Chairman Armstrong of the Finance Committee to restore it. In that event, it would have to come back to the House, where the House machine would once again have to decide whetbsr it wished to continue the fight. It will not surprise anybody if a confsrence committee would have to be appointed with special reference to this item.

The bill also carriss $73,000 extra for the use of the Jamestown Exposition Commission.

HUGHES REMOVES POOL.

Says Charges Against Superintendent of Poor Have Been Proved.

ALBANY, April 12.—Gov. Hughes removed from office to-day Wilbur T. Pool as Superintendent of the Poor of Niagara County, against whom the Board of Supervisors of the county recently made charges of extravagance and irregularities in accounts. The Governor, in his memorandum, says:

"The findings of the Commissioner appointed to take testimony in relation to the charges preferred by the Board of Supervisors of Niagara County against Wilbur T. Pool as Superintendent of the Poor, are sustained by the evidence. The most serious matter is tbe charge of extravagance in administration. This chargo has been abundantly establisbed. The excuses presented are without merit, and the proved wastefulness and inefficiency are such as to justify the Board of Supervisors in petitioning for the Superintendent's removal. Tbe prayer of the petitioners is granted."

FIRST-AID BILL PASSED.

The Measure Obliges Factories to Provide for Possible Accidents.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 12.—The Assembly passed the Stern bill to-day, which compels fatcories to keep surgical appliances and supplies ready for instant use in cases of accident. The Goldberg bill, providing for a public park in New York east of Second Avenue, between Fifty-sixth and Seventy-fourth Streets, was also passed.

The Francis Sixty-sixth Street Transfer bill was held up until Monday on the objection of Majority Leader Moreland. The Duell Newspaper Directors' bill was advanced.

MORE MADISON AVENUE CARS.

These recommendations follow an extended investigation of the service on the line.

CAPT. WENDEL DISMISSED.

Gov. Hughes Approves the Finding of the Court-Martial.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 12.—Gov. Hughes approved to-day the finding of the court-martial in the case of Capt. Louis Wendel, formerly commander of the First Battery, N. G. N. Y., who was accused of conduct unbecoming an officer, a term in this instance used to characterize proceedings which brought the Captain into contact with the criminal courts.

The Governor also approved of the sentence of dishonorable discharge imposed on Capt. Wendel, but remits the $100 fine. The Governor declares that this trifling penalty detracted from the just weight of the sentence.

UNIONS BAR AMATEUR BAND.

So Morristown Will Not Be In Line in Firemen's Parade at Milburn.

Special to The New York Times.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., April 12.—Because the First Ward Company of the Morristown Fire Department was notified by the committee in charge of tbe celebration at Milburn to-morrow that only union bands will be allowed in the parade, the company has canceled its acceptance of an invitation to take part in the parade.

The company had engaged the Morristown Flute and Drum Corps, one of the best amateur musical organizations in this State. The corps is made up of business men and has a membership of fifty. It dates its organization back to civil war days, and has taken part in many of the great parades and pageants in New York and other cities.

The hose company did not care to go to Milburn without the local musical organization. The members of the corps are engaged in business pursuits for a livelihood and have never affiliated with the Musicians' Union. The Independent Hose Company of this town also expected to parade at Milburn, but has decided not to go, so the town will not be represented.

Candidates for Ministry Scarce.

SARATOGA, April 12.—Declaring that the Methodist Episcopal Church is confronted by a scarcity of candidates for the ministry, the examining board of the Troy Conference asked to-day a suspension of its rule requiring tbe equivalent of a high school education and putting an age limit on candidates. This was done in order that several of the twelve probationers admitted to-day might be received.

GOVERNOR TO HELP PROBE CITY BUREAUS

He Will Have Conference with Mr. Ellison on Monday—Legislature May Act.

SURPRISES ARE IN THE WIND

Merchants' Association to Give Evidence of Neglect of Streets at Hearings of the Ahearn Investigation.

Gov. Hughes and Corporation Counsel Ellison will bold a conference in this city on next Monday regarding the investigation of all the city departments proposed by Mayor McClellan. The meeting between Mr. Ellison and Mr. Hughes was arranged yesterday by long distance telephone, and it is expected that as a result of the conference the Governor will take the initiative in having the Legislature appoint an investigating committee.

On Thursday Mr. Ellison wrote his assistant in Albany to ascertain the feelings of the Governor and the members of ths Legislature on the question. Yesterday Mr. Butts telephoned that Gov. Hughes had consented to meet Mr. Ellison on Monday and discuss the matter. It is reported that an announcement will be made after the conference which will occasion surprise. What the nature of the statement is no one who is willing to tell seems to know.

Ths Merchants' Association announced yesterday that it would enter the fight which appears to be springing up out of the investigation of Borough President Abearn's department. On Monday, wben ths hearings in the Ahearn case commence, represntatives of the association will be on hand to present evidence gathered by association members in regard to street neglect, and will produce photographs. It is highly probable tbat if a general investigation is brought about this association and other civic organizations will take part and complications are likely to dsvelop.

The talk of investigating all tbe departments in the city has caused a great deal of surprise among politicians. It was said frequently yesterday that Charles F. Murphy of Tammany Hall had been contemplating just such a move, as a part of ths fight he is making against the Mayor. Another report was that ths Mayor and Mr. Ellison have an idea that the scope of the investigation will lie in their hands and that they will be able to direct it where they see fit.

The Republicans about the City Hall smile at this and declare that once a Republican Legislature starts in to investigate a Democratic administration in this city there is likely to be "something doing."

Mr. Ellison said yesterday that he intended to ask tbe Governor to make the scope of the investigation wide enough to permit the investigation of every department. The Mayor refused to discuss the matter further than to say that he boped the investigation would be thorough. Borough President Ahearn declined to say anything whatever about the plan.

THE TIMES erroneously ascribed this statement to Mayor McClellan:

"There have been threats made that maybe an investigation of other city departments might be necessary if the proceedings were continued against President Ahearn."

The statemsnt was made hy Corporation Counsel Ellison, after he had had a conference with tbe Mayor.

FIANCEE WATCHES TRIAL.

Alleged Robber of the Misses Lockwood School Tries to Prove an Alibi.

WHITE PLAINS, April 12.—Bert Curtis, charged with robbing the Misses Lockwood's boarding school in Scarsdale, was tried here to-day before County Judge Platt and a jury. Ths prisoner was charged with having ransacked the school and stolen money and jewelry belonging to the young women students on the night of March 7 last. Curtis is engaged to be married to an attractive-looking young woman who sat in the courtroom all day and listened eagerly to ths testimony. The jury returned a verdict of guilty at 10 o'clock to-night.

Miss Lockwood and several of ber pupils identified him as a man who had visited the school on the day of the robbery and asked the name of the French tutor. One of the victims of tbe robbery was Miss Fay O'Brien, daugbter of Justice Morgan J. O'Brien. Miss O'Brisn lost a diamond ring and other jewelry valued at $525. Another witness against Curtis was Mrs. Dan Daly. Mrs. Daly was in a jewelry store the day after the robbery, and saw Curtis trying to dispose of some of the plunder.

The prisoner tried hard to prove an alibi. One defense set up in his behalf was that he does not smoke cigarettes. This defense was entered because one of the young women students testified that the stranger she saw on the day of the robbery held a cigarette between his fingers.

The case will be continued on Monday.

TRIES TO FIX MURDER ON A POLICEMAN

Shooting of Dr. Samuel S. Guy's Wife Develops a New Defense.

GUY HELD FOR GRAND JURY

Servant Swears Wife Stepped on Guy's Face When He Fell Just Before Shooting.

Dr. Samuel S. Guy of Far Rockaway was held yesterday for the action of the Queens County Grand Jury by Coroner Nutt, upon ths recommendation of the Coroner's jury following an inquest into the death of Mrs. Lillian Mott Guy, who was shot and killed on Monday, April 8. The jury was out but ten minutes, returning with a verdict that "Mrs. Guy died from a gunshot wound caused by shots from a pistol in the hands of a party or parties unknown, and we recommend that Dr. Samuel S. Guy be held for the action of the Grand Jury."

Former Deputy Police Commissioner William L. Mathot acted as counsel for Dr. Guy. There wore but two witnesses, Dr. William M. Nammack, Coroner's Physician, who performed the autopsy, and Annie Hansen, the Norwegian servant, who was the cause of the quarrel between Dr. Guy and his wife. The girl had been employed in the Guy house for more than a year. She demonstrated to tbe Coroner's jury how Mrs. Guy ran from the dining room, where the shooting took place, to the kitchen, with her arms thrown above her head, and then fell to the floor. During ber recital and physical demonstration, Dr. Guy, whose aspect had been fairly cheerful, assumed an agonized expression. Deep lines appeared between his eyes and about the corners of his mouth.

"I tried to get Mrs. Guy to speak to me," said Annie, "but she could not. She had fallen to the floor, saying just 'Oh!' and then could not speak.

"Only Mrs. Guy and I were in the house when Dr. Guy returned. He asked me what business Policeman Berry had in the house, and I explained that he came in to borrow a hammer. He said he did not believe it, but believed that he had been there with me. I cried and Mrs. Guy came in from the dining room, and said: 'Don't cry, Annie; you see what condition the doctor is in. Then they both went to the dining room, and a few minutes later they entered the pantry between the kitchen and the dining room and had words. Mrs. Guy said: 'I'll have you arrested.' She said this twice, and each time Dr. Guy said she couldn't do it. Then they came into the kitcben, and she grabbed him by the shoulders, and he fell upon the floor by the range. She stepped upon him, upon his face and chest, and said: 'I will choke you. Will you be good?' Dr. Guy said he would not, and she stepped on his face some more. Then he promised and she let him up and told him to go into the dining room. He said he was terribly hurt, and she replied that she did not care.

"They went into the dining room, and in five or six or seven minutes there were two shots. Mrs. Guy came running into the kitchen, sboving the door open, and fell to the floor. I thought I heard steps in the pantry and ran outdoors screaming. I have seen pistols in the house but twice, once a couple of months ago, in a grip in Dr. Guy's room, and once Monday night, when I led Policeman Farley upstairs to hunt for the revolver. The one we found looked like the first I had seen. We both smelled of it and it smelled like fresh powder."

Mr. Mathot's cross-examination was not very searching. Annie said Mrs. Guy was a large, strong woman, and that the shooting had taken place at 5:30 o'clock. She knew the hour, she said, because this had looked at the clock at the time Mrs. Guy ran into the kitchen.

"Why did you look at the clock?" asked Mathot, and appeared to feel that he had scored a point when she could not tell.

After tbe Coroner had held Dr. Guy for the Grand Jury he descended from the bench and shook hands with him and said he had done only what was necessary. "I will be over to see you."

"I know," said Dr. Guy, who was once a Coroner, sitting in the same courtroom. "You could do nothing different."

The examination, whicb was set for to-day, will be adjourned until April 27, but District Attorney Darrin will present the case to the Grand Jury April 16. He expected to try the case in May, he said.

Crowds of persons surged around Dr. Guy as he was being led from the room to be taken back to his cell in the jail in Long Island City. He shook hands with a hundred or more, and said: "Everything will come out all right. It must."

Dr. Guy will claim, it is said, that the fatal shots must have been fired by a police officer, as he (Dr. Guy) was not in the house at the time of the shooting, but entered the room only to find his wife prostrate upon the floor.

It is said that Dr. Guy made a statement to a person, who will be an important witness for the prosecution, that a policeman, whom he named, had been to see his wife, and that the shooting must have been done by the policeman.

Lawyer Mathot declined to permit Dr. Guy to make any statement whatever yesterday, and would not himself comment upon the reports as above stated.

TESTIFIES AGAINST WIFE.

Miss Raymond Aided in Her Slander Suit by the Defendant's Husband.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, April 12.—The trial of the suit of Miss Grace Raymond, the Mount Vernon Sunday School teacher, against Mrs. Naomie Duncombe Ring, known as Mount Vernon's richest woman, for $20,000 damages for alleged slander and assault, was continued to-day before Supreme Court Justice Tompkins at White Plains. The star witness for the defense was Mrs. Ring, who denied that she had ever struck Miss Raymond, as alleged by the plaintiff in her testimony. In the slander action P. J. Ring, manager of the Mount Vernon Opera House, which Mrs. Ring built at a cost of $50,000 and then gave to Mr. Ring, created a stir by appearing as a witness against his own wife and championing the cause of Miss Raymond. Miss Raymond was formerly Ring's bookkeeper before his marriage to the defendant, who was then a widow. It was because of Mrs. Ring's jealousy of Miss Raymond before her marriage to Ring, it developed, that she is alleged to have punched both Miss Raymond and Mr. Ring when sbe met them on ths street.

Mrs. Ring, in her testimony, declared that Ring bad induced her to marry him and deed over property to him on the threat of death.

"What did he say to you?" Lawyer Brennan asked of Mrs. Ring.

"He said that if I did not give my property to him my dead body would be found in a lot. He wanted me to withdraw my suit against him for the recovery of my property, and when I began an action to protect myself he threatened me with the action now brought by Miss Raymond."

Mrs. Ring, who was somewhat nervous, testified that shs bad never lived with Ring after marriage, "and I am glad of it, too," she added in a stage whisper.

Miss Raymond alleged that Mrs. Ring called her "dreadful ugly names" on June 28, 1904, while she was on her way to mass, and that Mrs. Ring attacked ber while coming out of the Opera House.

Manager Ring declared under oath that his wife had offered to settle with Miss Raymond in his presence for $3,000, because, the defendant asserted, tbat "to drag the matter into court would mean too much notoriety to her. Mrs. Ring has paid out vast sums of money," said Mr. Ring, "to try and find out something about me and Miss Raymond, not only recently, but in years gone by."

William N. Hoyt, former City Clerk of Mount Vernon, in his testimony, asserted that Ring met him in the Opera House ons day and asked him what he meant by "monkeying" around Miss Raymond, and be said that he did not know what he meant. Thereupon Ring, the witness said, told him that he didn't want any one paying attention to Miss Raymond. The argument became so warm, the witness declared, that Ring finally punched the witness in the jaw.

Ring denied that he had evsr had any such conversation with Hoyt, and declared Miss Raymond had been an employe, nothing more. The case will go to the jury on Monday.

SAYS ABNER CONFESSED.

Warrants Out for Suspects in Latest Breathitt County Murder.

LEXINGTON, Ky., April 12.—Warrants have been issued in Beattyville, Lee County, for the arrest of Jeptha Merrell, "Bud" Begley and Hayden Reynolds, charging them with tbe murder of Jesse Abner, who was found dead in Owsley County last night, with three bullets in his back. His horse was grazing near his body. He is a relative of John Abner, charged jointly with the Hargises, Callahan and others with the killing of Dr. B. D. Cox in Breathitt County.

It was announced also to-day that John Abner had confessed, giving details of the Breathitt County murders. Lawyer Floyd Byrd, one of the counsel for the prosecution, said this afternoon that the confession had been made in the form of a written statement, giving details of Abner's part in the murders.

Byrd says he refused to accept the confession, because he has evidence enough to convict all the defendants without promising Abner immunity.

EVIDENCE FROM CUBA FOR FREMONT CASE

Bank President to Come Here and Tell Real Facts About Alleged $2,500 "Deposit."

SISTER TO HELP DEFENDANT

She Will Testify Respecting the Major's Contingent Interest in Family Property—Action Nearly Ended.

With the exception of the testimony of W. H. Vaughn, President of the National Bank of Cuba, who is coming to New York, the Government's case against Major Francis P. Frémont, U. S. A., who is being court-martialed for alleged questionable financial dealings with several banks in this State, was closed yesterday. When Mr. Vaughn gets to New York he is expected to furnish some interesting evidence concerning a deposit of several thousand dollars which Major Frémont is said to have informed Mr. Donnelly, his partner in the Cuban cattle and tobacco ventures, was on deposit in that institution to his credit.

When Col. Morris, the President of the court-martial, called the court to order yesterday morning, Capt. Glasgow, the Judge Advocate, called as the Government's next witness J. L. Signor, cashier of the Plattsburg National Bank, the man who wrote to Secretary of War Taft respecting the financial affairs of Major Frémont. Mr. Signor corroborated the testimony of Mr. Moffitt, the President of the bank, who testified on Thursday relative to several loans that the bank had made to the Major, and which it was said he hed never repaid.

Loans Amounted to $7,500.

Mr. Signor, testifying about the first of the loans, said he remembered that Major Frémont had told Mr. Moffitt that the property he said he owned in San Francisco was "too valuable to be lost for so small a sum." After Mr. Signor had testified along the same lines as the other bankers preceding him, the testimony in the recent Frémont bankruptcy proceedings was introduced in evidence.

In those proceedings Major Frémont testified that of the money he borrowed between 1905 and May, 1906, about $2,700 had been put into the tobacco business, and that about $5,000 had gone to the support of his family. His wife, who was a Miss Caroline T. Townsend, who inherited considerable property, and who has since divorced him, he said, was living at a hotel at thet time, and that her expenses, which were about $200 a month, were paid by him. He had written to bis creditors, he added, that the entire amount of his indebtedness would eventually be paid in full. He denied that he was indebted to a Plattsburg restaurant proprietor to the extent of $200.

After the testimony in the bankruptcy proceedings had been read, Capt. Glasgow, the Judge Advocate, asked Mr. Loftus, the lawyer for the defense, to produce a deed of trust that Miss Elizabeth Frémont, a sister of the accused, had executed in Los Angeles, Cal. This deed, which was executed in June, 1904, it is alleged, conveyed certain San Francisco property to Major Frémont, which he used in procuring his loans. The deed was surrendered and placed in evidence.

Government's Case Outlined.

At this juncture Capt. Glasgow made a motion, the nature of which indicated that the Government would attempt to prove that the $2,500 Major Frémont said he had in the National Bank of Cuba was money that the officer had borrowed from the same bank. Capt. Glasgow said it would be nearly two weeks before Mr. Vaughn, the President of the bank, could reach New York, and he asked the defense to consent to the admission of a statement from Mr. Vaughn, which would set forth that the $2,500 referred to was borrowed from, and not deposited with, the bank.

The lawyers for the defense refused to agree to this arrangement, and then Capt. Glasgow announced that he would call Mr. Vaughn as soon as he arrived in New York. Otherwise, he added, the case of the Government against Major Frémont was closed.

Mr. Loftus for the defense then addressed Col. Morris and asked for an adjournment until he could get depositions from Miss Frémont, which would give the reasons why Major Frémont was under the impression that he was interested in the Frémont California properties.

The Major to Testify.

Mr. Loftus said the property originally belonged to Gen. Frémont, the father of the accused, and that on Gen. Frémont's death the two surviving sons had transferred their rights in the property to their sister, Elizabeth. Since his financial troubles, Major Frémont, he added, had every reason to believe that the property would be placed at his disposal by his sister, so he considered that he had a "contingent interest" in it.

Mr. Loftus also said he expected to get depositions from Washington that would show that the Government had intended purchasing the property, and that such purchase would enhance its value. He would likewise get a deposition from the manager of the Cuban plantation which figures in the case, he said.

The court then adjourned until 11 A. M. next Tuesday, when Mr. Loftus will submit his depositions to the court for approval, together with the counter-questions of Capt. Glasgow, that will be included in the depositions. After the depositions are returned to New York, Major Frémont, he said, would take the stand and tell all about the trouble that has brought him before a court-martial.

EXILE SAVES A PRISONER.

Accused Youth's Sister Promises to Take Him to Scotland and Judge Relents.

PATERSON, April 12.—Because Duncan Johnstone is incorrigible and his parents are unable to control him he will be sent to Scotland, where he will remain, practically an exile, with a married brother.

Johnstone lives at 40 Robert Street. With another youth he was arrested some time ago when "Frenchy" Misner, the noted burglar, was arrested, but because the two young men promised to reform sentence was suspended. But about a week ago Detective Lord agai narrested Johnstone for stealing bicycles. Sentence was to have been passed on the young man to-day, but his mother and sister pleaded with the Judge not to send the boy to jail, promising that they would take him to Scotland shortly if the Judge would have mercy. The Judge ordered the young man to appear before him on next Thursday, when he will suspend sentence provided the agreement to go to Scotland still holds good.

On motion of the Bar Association, George Burnham, Jr., was disbarred by the Appellate Division yesterday. The disbarment was made because of the conviction of Burnham for the crime of grand larceny in the first degree in connection with the management of the funds of the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company. He was sentenced to state prison for two years.

WAGON SINKS IN BROADWAY.

Pavement, Undermined by Water, Gives Way Beneath Team.

The pavement at Broadway, 157th Street, and Audubon Place, where the great thoroughfare for automobiles switches off toward Riverside Drive in Washington Heights, is composed of large oblong blocks of stone on a concrete foundation. When John Keenan, a driver for a building contracting firm, drove over a spot at 157th Street early yesterday morning with a five-ton load of crushed stone, he was panic-stricken when wagon and horses suddenly sank from view of Broadway into the earth.

The horses, detecting danger, snorted and screamed, and struggled frantically to get out of the sink hole, but, as the earth and pavement fell in about them, they were powerless to move. The heavy wagon with its load of stone sank up to its top into the deep hole. Hundreds of persons gathered about, shouting encouragement to the driver, who managed to climb out to safety.

Two patrolmen of the West 152d Street Station appeared and suggested that the crowd of men "give a hand" and lift the wagon out. Ae many as could wedge about used all their strength in a futile attempt. They failed even to budge the wagon.

The truck pole had been broken off short in the fall, but by the aid of two other teams and a score of spectators the horses were hauled out. A telephone message was sent to the Department of Streets and a squad of workmen was sent to the rescue. They worked five hours with picks and shovels before the wagon was pulled to the surface.

Investigation proved that streams of water had worked through the earth over the west wall of the Subway and washed out a section of earth 20 feet long, 8 feet wide, and about 10 feet deep beneath the pavement. The roof of the Subway was not damaged so far as could be learned.

BRADY CONSENTS TO SUBWAY.

Will Advise Harway Company to Permit Spur's Construction.

Anthony N. Brady, according to Controller Metz, has promised to advise the Harway Improvement Company of Brooklyn, of which Mr. Brady is said to be the moving spirit, to give its consent to the building of a subway past its property in Stillwell Avenue, Brooklyn, part of the route mapped out for the Coney Island spur of the Fourth Avenue subway. Mr. Metz issued a statement yesterday in which he said that Mr. Brady's attitude had been misunderstood.

"I went to eee Mr. Brady to-day with a committee of citizens," said Mr. Metz, "and I explained to him that the Coney Island spur would be advertised as part of the tri-borough route, as well as by itself, and that any one could bid, and the line could be extended over the Manhattan Bridge through the extension the city is going to build and thus come into Manhattan regardless of the present tunnel. On this condition Mr. Brady agreed to advise giving consent, and I was promised by the other Directors that I would have such consents to-morrow to forward to the Rapid Transit Commission."

Mr. Metz eaye that the field is now open for prompt advertising for bids for the construction of the routes, and that if the statements made, that capitalists are really interested are true, there is no reason why the road should not eoon be constructed.

In many quarters the reversal of Mr. Brady's attitude is regraded as foreshadowing the bidding by the B. R. T. for that part of the route mentioned.

WANTS A SECOND DIVORCE.

Wife Says New Jersey Decree Her Husband Obtained Was Illegal.

A suit for absolute divorce was begun before Supreme Court Justice Bischoff yesterday by Annie D'Zon against Abram D'Zon. The plaintiff alleges that, after obtaining a divorce from her in New Jersey, the defendant married another woman. The New Jersey divorce, she declares, is invalid.

D'Zon, who is a Brooklyn photographer, declared that his divorce was legal. A letter was submitted to the court, which had been written by the plaintiff. In this letter the plaintiff declared that she had obtained a degree as a physician and was determined to abandon the defendant in an effort to find her ideal. She also declared:

"I have very little hope of getting married. The man to whom I would get married will have to be in a position to keep me well materially, not relying upon the income from my practice. He must come in contact with people who will be congenial to me and in sympathy with my mental and moral desires. Besides, he, personally, will have to be pleasant to me."

The couple were married in Russia in 1885. Decision was reserved.

Alleges Violation of Contract and Unwarranted Use of His Name in Selling Books to Alumni.

When Dr. Waterman T. Hewett, Professor of German Language and Literature at Cornell University, received from the printer a bulky set of four volumes, labeled "Cornell University—A History," most of which he had written himself, he was not at all pleased. He says the books were cheaply bound in linen, whereas he had expected a heavy leather binding, and the illustrations were not the kind he had supposed would be used. He also says there were many imperfections in typography.

Altogether, he was not satisfied with the result of three years of work. He had used up on the books much valuable vacation time in which he could have been resting. He had written and published other books, and did not think the appearance of these volumes would add to his reputation.

So Dr. Hewett entered suit against the publishers, the Century History Company, of 428 Lafayette Place, asking $4,000 damages and appealing for an injunction to restrain the company from keeping the history on the market. There was a long delay in getting the case to trial, and meanwhile the history had been selling freely. Alumni had been receiving the volumes, and Dr. Hewett says they, too, were disappointed. The price of the history was $25, and many of the purchasers had contracted to take it long before it went to the press. Dr. Hewett also complained that the company wrongfully used his name in making some of these contracts.

The case came before Justice Leventritt in the Supreme Court yesterday. J. E. Freeman of the law firm of Stover, Hall & Freeman represented Prof. Hewett. The Century History Company's attorneys, Moody & Gotty, did not appear. They filed an answer, and Justice Leventritt ordered an inquest in the case to take place on Monday before him. Later in the day Moody & Getty conferred with Mr. Freeman, and announced that they would appear.

At that time it will be explained for Prof. Hewett, who has been at Cornell for nearly forty years, that he entered into a contract with the County History Company, of which Louis A. Williams is President, several years ago. He was to write the history of Cornell and was to receive $1,000 down and a royalty of $1.50 each on the first 500 sets, $2 on the second 500, and $2.50 each on the third 500. The volumes left the press about January 1, 1906, but Prof. Hewett says he did not get his $1,000 until after he had threatened to bring action against President Williams and his company. He adds that about 2,000 students of Cornell bought the history.

There are about 20,000 pages in the entire set and several hundred illustrations, including a picture of the author. Special articles written by the deans of the various colleges in Cornell are included in the work. The names of every man who graduated from Cornell, or who had anything to do with the history of the institution, were to have been used in the history, Prof. Hewett thought, but he says many of the names were omitted. The work is dedicated as follows:

"To the alumni, who have studied in these halls and who have gone forth to a larger life beyond, whose success is our success, whose honor is our honor, these volumes are dedicated by the author."

Prof. Hewett yesterday made this statement through his lawyer, Mr. Freeman:

"The history was published and distributed before I was fully aware of the many imperfections and errors in typography. Immediately after its publication I began this suit for damages against the concern. Prior to its publication and distribution the publishers agreed not to use my name in soliciting subscriptions, but, in violation of that, they went so far as to use letters of introduction, stamped with my name, to prominent alumni. This, however, was discontinued after I had protested."

Mr. Freeman said that Mr. Williams had published several histories, among them a history of New Jersey, and another of Wisconsin, and also a Western Magazine of History.

BROTHERS' STRANGE REUNION

Meet After 36 Years—One Has the Other Arrested.

SEATTLE, April 12.—After having been separated for thirty-six years, two brothers were united in a strange manner here yesterday. One of them, Johann Weber, of Pennsylvania, after complying with requests made by Yost Weber, a longshoreman of Seattle, for money, came West to see if the Seattle man was really his brother.

On arriving here, the man who had asked for assistance was pointed out, but the Pennsylvanian declared that the longshoreman was not his brother, and immediately had him arrested as an imposter. After returning to Pennsylvania, he was again called West to be a witness in the case. Notwithstanding the denial of Johann that the man was his relative, Yost maintained that he was a brother whom he had not seen since leaving Germany for a seafaring life thirty-six years ago.

United States Commissioner Kiefer, before whom the case was tried, hit upon a plan of having the brothers, separately, write their cousins' names. Both did this and they tallied. Other tests were made, including a recital of the longshoreman's class at his confirmation. When it became plain to both that they were brothers, an affecting scene followed and both men left the court arm in arm after the judge had dismissed the case.

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, April 12.—Johann Weber, who has just been re-united with a long lost brother at Seattle, has been a resident of New Bedford, Penn., a village ten miles from here, from some time. He is reputed to be well-to-do.

OIL TRUST CASE NEAR END.

Jury Will Have to Consider 1,463 Counts in Indictment.

CHICAGO, April 12.—Final motions to quash the whole indictment against the Standard Oil Company, charged with obtaining illegal freight rates, were overruled to-day by Judge Landis, in the United tSates District Court. Judge Landis stated that 439 of the counts in the indictment were bad and these he ruled out, leaving 1,463 for consideration by the jury.

Attorney Rosenthal moved that the prosecution be instructed to signify on which one of the 1,463 counts the Government would hinge its case. He maintained that if there was an offense at could be but one offense, and the Government must show what that one offense was.

Judge Landis refused to consider the matter at this time, saying that if the verdict of the jury were "guilty" the question might then be taken up.

It is expected the case will reach the jury to-morrow or Monday.

Mendel Must Pay Alimony.

Supreme Court Justice Bischoff signed an order yesterday directing Julius L. Mendel, a broker, to pay his wife, Ray Mendel, $15 a week alimony, pending the determination of a suit for a separation brought by her on the ground of cruel treatment. Mrs. Mendel says that because of her husband's friendship for other women he neglected her.

Heirs of a Man Who Had Been Executed Lose an Appeal.

CHICAGO, April 12.—The Appellate Court declared to-day that public policy forbids the recovery of insurance on a person executed for murder. Robert Kilpatrick, who was executed in Pennsylvania for murdering his housekeeper, Elizabeth Bearmore, at Chester, Penn., on Feb. 14, 1902, insured his life before committing the murder. Following his execution, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company was asked to make payment on the policy. Suit was subsequently brought in Chicago to recover.

The lower court here decided adversely, and this decision was affirmed to-day by the Appellate Court.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., April 12.—Judge Knappen in the United States Circuit Court this afternoon granted a preliminary injunction restraining the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company from voting the stock which it holds in the Osceola Copper Mine.

The injunction was issued at the request of A. S. Bigelow, President of the Osceola Company, and is the outcome of the recent hearing before Judge Knappen following the action of the Michigan Legislature in recalling the bill to forbid one mining corporation to acquire stock in another.

GOVERNOR TO BE CHIEF INQUISITOR

Bill Empowers Him to Investigate in Person All State Departments and Institutions.

PARTY LEADERS GLOOMY

Chief Executive Will Be Able to Act at Any Time and Anywhere Without Warning.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 12.—With the introduction to-day by Sherman Moreland, majority leader of the Assembly, of his bill providing the necessary powers and appropriation for the proposed investigation of State departments and State institutions, it bas become evident to everybody here that Gov. Hughes himself intends to be the chief investigator. And the Republican machine leaders, bearing in mind the ability for turning light on dark places which Mr. Hughes displayed as chief inquisitor of the Stevens Gas Investigating Committee and the Armstrong Committee, which laid bare iniquities in the insurance world, are looking blue.

Now that the provisions of the bill have become known, it is generally conceded that it is the most thorough of all the Governor's reform measures. As originally drafted by Mr. Moreland, the bill vested in the Cbairmen of the Senate Finance Committee and the Committee on Ways and Means in the Assembly, who in a measure are responsible for the financial policy of the State, the power to make the investigation of its various departments and institutions. After Mr. Moreland had conferred with the Governor the bill was changed so as to provide for a commissioner or a commission, to be appointed by the Governor, to do the work. That was as far as the bill went until yesterday. Then, at the request of the Governor, according to a report which is not denied by Mr. Moreland, a clause was inserted whereby the Governor in person may conduct the investigation, should he see fit to do so.

Here is the section containing the vital provision of the bill, as amended:

Text of the Clause.

"The Governor may, at any time, and at intervals of not more than three years must, appoint one or more competent persons to examine and investigate each department, board, bureau, division, and commission of the State, its methods and system of bookkeeping and vouchering, its system of purchasing supplies for the State, its system of keeping records and documents, the number and grade of the employes thereof, the kind and nature of the work done by each employe, the salary paid therefor, and generally into the methods and system of doing the business of the State in vogue in said departments, board, bureau, division and commission.

"A different person or set of persons may be appointed to examine and investigate each department, board, bureau, division and commission, or any number thereof in the discretion of the Governor. The person or persons so appointed are hereby authorized to take testimony under oath and require the production of books, papers and documents, and shall report to the Governor with his or their recommendations.

"The Governor is hereby authorized and empowered in his discretion to investigate in person each department, board, bureau, division and commission of the State in the same manner and to the same extent as may the person or persons whose appointment is authorized hereunder. He is also authorized and empowered in making such examination or investigation to take testimony under oath, to subpoena and enforce the attendance of witnesses, and to require the production of all books, papers and documents.

"The Governor shall transmit his own report and the report or reports of such examiner or examiners to the Legislature, with such recommendations as he may deem proper, and shall fix the compensation of each of the persons so appointed and report the same to the Legislature. Such compensation and all necessary expenses incurred in any examination or investigation shall be paid by the Treasurer on the warrant of the Controller on the order of the Governor, and shall in no case exceed the amount appropriated for such purpose."

The bill if enacted will give Gov. Hughes greater power than any of his predecessors in the Governor's chair. A careful reading of the bill demonstrates that his powers of investigation will not be limited to State departments and institutions even, but that it will extend to the affairs of counties and cities.

May Act Without Warning.

In the past the investigations of State departments and institutions have generally been conducted by committees of the Legislature, and all those concerned have been able to know long in advance of what they should expect. This gave abundant opportunity for "window dressing." Under the new system, which will be inaugurated if the Moreland bill is enacted, the Governor will be able at any time he deems proper, sitting in the privacy of his office, to order an investigation or begin it himself without a moment's warning. The new system will virtually amount to a State Secret Service.

It was explained to-day that there was a twofold purpose in view with the bill—first, to keep the employes of the State in wholesome fear of being caught unawares by an investigation, and, second, to obtain for the Chief Executive and the Legislature the minute knowledge of the organization and working methods of the various departments and institutions which is necessary for the establishing and maintenance of a fixed policy of the State that will insure continuity and progress ,to succeed the more or less chaotic and unscientific policy in force at present.

It was learned to-day that the investigation of the various State departments and institutions is scheduled to begin the moment the Moreland bill is passed, which will mean that probably it will be under way a month from now. One of the first objects will be to obtain a complete list of all the State employes, their grades, their salaries, and what duties they perform for the money paid them by the State. There are hundreds of men now on the State payrolls as "laborers," all with fancy salaries. These are mostly favorites and retainers of some boss or other and the only labor they perform is to draw their salaries with great regularity. It is needless to say that they make up for their lack of industry in the service of the State by their activity in the political vineyard of the boss to whom they owe their allegiance.

In explaining his bill, Assemblyman Moreland declared that from the very nature of department business some employes were bound to fall into ruts and lose some part of their value to the State.

"This bill," he said, "giving the Governor himself power to investigate all departments and additional power to appoint examiners or inspectors at any time will, I believe, if made law, go far toward preserving effectiveness within the departments and preventing unbusinesslike methods and conditions.

DR. LYMAN MAY LOSE AN EYE.

Offensive Peddler Whom He Pushed Away Assaulted Him.

Dr. William Lyman of 30 Seventh Avenue told Magistrate Whitman yesterday, in Jefferson Market Court, that he would probably lose the sight of his right eye as the result of an assault made upon him by a flower peddler at Sixth Avenue and Fourteenth Street. The physician said that while walking along Fourteenth Street with his wife one of the peddlers was very offensive in his efforts to sell flowers to Mrs. Lyman, and her husband pushed him away.

"The fellow then hit me with some blunt instrument on the nose and right eye," Dr. Lyman testified. The assault occurred on the evening of March 29. Detective James E. Murphy of the West Thirtieth Street Station arrested John Pappadokia, a Greek, for the assault. Magistrate Whitman held him in $500 bail for trial.

SENATE IS MISUNDERSTOOD.

So President Wilson Says in a Lecture to Columbia Students.

President Woodrow Wilson of Princeton University lectured yesterday afternoon at Columbia on "The Senate." The lecture, the sixth in a series on "Party Government in the United States," was to have been given last week, but was postponed owing to the illness of Dr. Wilson.

Dr. Wilson said that here in the East we did not understand the Senate; we did not realize that its membership is made up "more from the sections of individuals ('the region east of the Mississippi and north of Mason and Dixon's line') than from the sections of masses and organized interests. Those who read only the Eastern papers seldom have presented to them in the news of the day a complete picture of the Senate in action as it really is. Attention in the East is too much concentrated upon a few Senators; the Senators, that is, he said, who represent New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and Connecticut.

In speaking of this side of the Senate President Wilson said:

"The method by which Senators are chosen and the principles upon which the choice is made may easily be misconceived by those who confine their examination of the matter too exclusively to those States where dangerous influences are chiefly at work. In most of the States great corporations, giant combinations of interest, have little to do with the choices made. Men go to the Senate who are in a very real sense the choice of the people—or rather men to whom natural and genuine political leadership has come by reason of their personal force or of their services to their party—men for the most part without independent means; men of the rank and file who have made their way to the top by political, not by commercial means, and who enjoy veritable popular support, and only here and there is there a Senator upon whose election rumor bas put an unpleasant taint. They are for the most part truly representative spokesmen of the people from whom they come. In mind as well as in legal authority they represent the common thought of their States."

SPENT 30 CENTS; GOT $45.

Dr. Knapp Recovered His Lost Cash by Advertising in The Times.

Two $20 bills, one green and the other yellow, and one $5 bill lay on the steps of the Seventy-second Street station of the Ninth Avenue Elevated line for five minutes or more on Thursday morning, walked on and unseen. The owner, Dr. Clinton Beecham Knapp, had dropped them from his pocket as he ran up the stairs to catch a train. Twenty-four hours later Dr. Knapp was again in possession of his money.

Dr. Knapp, who lives at 60 West Seventy-sixth Street, had an appointment downtown early on Thursday and he reached the elevated station about 9 o'clock. As he ran up the steps he put his hand in his pocket to find a nickel, pulled out the three bills unknowingly, and went on his way. When he got downtown he discovered his loss.

Dr. Alexander L. Robinson of 110 Central Park West mounted the steps of the same station five minutes after Dr. Knapp. He saw two men who were ahead of him step on what appeared to be some green paper, and when ho reached that step he picked up the three hills and put them in his pocket. Yesterday morning he bought a copy of THE NEW YORK TIMES and found thia advertisement in the lost and found column:

LOST—$45, on April 11, on or about 6th Av. elevated between 72d St. and 23d St.; reward. Dr. Knapp, 60 West 76th St.

Shortly after seeing the advertisement Dr. Robinson turned the money over to Dr. Knapp, who admitted that he had taken a long chance in advertising for money lost, considering the fact that the $45 was not contained in a pocketbook or accompanied by papers or other things whereby the owner could be identified.

Dr. Knapp's cash account of the transaction should read: "Lost, $45. Recovered, $45. Cost of advertisement, 30 cents. Net gain, $44.70."

As for Dr. Robinson: Diogenes please write.

FEES ILLEGAL, SAYS ELLISON.

Tax Marshal's Right to $40,000 to $50,000 Yearly Questioned.

Corporation Counsel Ellison, in a letter to Mayor McClellan yesterday, asserted that, in his opinion, ex-State Senator Louis Munzinger, Marshal for the collection of arrears of personal taxes, is not entitled to one cent of the commission he has drawn for collections that have been made by the city through his office. These fees amount to between $40,000 and $50,000 a year, out of which the Marshal has to pay the expenses of his office, which approximate $10,000.

Mr. Ellison's letter to the Mayor is as follows:

My Dear Mr. Mayor: Answering your inquiry as to the right of the City Marshal having the collection of arrears of taxes to commissions or fees, I beg leave to say that in my opinion he is entitled thereto solely in case of a levy.

My understanding of the situation is that no levies have been actually made, but that the fees of the Marshal have been collected as a result of notices sent out from his office demanding the payment of the arrears of taxes placed in his hands for collection, under which circumstances my opinion is that he is not entitled to fees or commissions. I remain, faithfully yours,

WILLIAM B. ELLISON.

The presumption has been that the Marshal was entitled to 5 per cent. of the first $300 of each claim collected and to 2½ per cent. of the rest of the claim. Mr. Ellison yesterday said that in his opinion the charter provided that no fee should be collected save where a levy was made. It is said that Mr. Munzinger had not made a single levy during his term. The moneys he received were paid in as a result of his sending notices to delinquents. Mr. Ellison admits that the whole question rests on whether levies have been made, and favors the holding of an investigation immediately.

Mr. Munzinger contends that the statement of Mr. Ellison is ridiculous, and that he is entitled to every fee he has charged. He sustains his contention by holding up as an example the method of doing business in the Sheriff's office. In his opinion the sending out of notices constitutes a levy, and he denies that he never made an actual levy by recalling that he once levied on the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company for $166,000.

"Then the company sued and got it all back again with costs," added Mr. Munzinger.

NEW SNOW REMOVAL SYSTEM.

Schedule to be Rearranged by City Officials and Civic Bodies.

When, recently, there was much adverse comment on the schedule by which Street Cleaning Commissioner Macdonough Craven had the streets of the city cleared of snow, that official wrote the Mayor to the effect that it would be more within the province of the Police and Fire Commissioners to arrange a schedule than within that of the Street Cleaning Department.

On receipt of this communication, or shortly thereafter, the Mayor requested six civic organizations to appoint representatives to confer with the Commissioner of Street Cleaning, the Police Commissioner, and the Fire Commissioner, for the purpose of revising the schedule of snow removal.

The organizations, it was announced yesterday, had appointed representatives as follows: Chamber of Commerce, John D. Crimmins; Board of Trade and Transportation, William H. Gibson; Merchants' Association, Henry R. Towne; North Side Board of Trade, John De Hart; City Club, Joseph M. Price; Brooklyn League, Samuel Rowland.

ROOSEVELT TELLS THE JOY OF BATTLE

Extolls the Rough Riders Who Fell in the Cuban Campaign.

THE MEASURE OF A MAN

The One Who Does His Ordinary Plain Duty, He Says, at Monument Dedication.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 12.—President Roosevelt made a speech in which he touched mainly on patriotism and good citizenship at the dedication to-day of the monument erected to the memory of the First Cavalry, United States Volunteers—the "Rough Riders" of the Spanish-American War in the National Cemetery at Arlington. Mrs. Allyn K. Capron, the widow of Capt. Capron of the regiment, who fell at Las Guasimas, pulled the cord holding the American flag that covered the monument. The Rev. Dr. D. J. Stafford of St. Patrick's Church here made the dedication address, and Chaplain H. A. Brown, U. S. A., pronounced the benediction.

The President was accompanied from the White House by Lieut. Gen. S. B. M. Young and Major Frank B. McCoy, his naval aide. A distinguished company assembled on the stand from which the President delivered his adress. They included Ambassador Jusserand of France, Baron Rosen, the Russian Ambassador; the Naval and Military Attachés of the Japanese and German Embassies, Assistant Secretary Oliver of the War Department, Assistant Secretary Newberry of the Navy Department, Gen. J. Franklin Bell, Chief of Staff of the Army, and Admiral and Mrs. Cowles.

The monument beara this inscription:

"First United States Volunteer Cavalry. In memory of the deceased members of the First United States Volunteer Cavalry, Spanish-American War. Erected by members of the regiment, 1906."

Above the tablet in raised letters are the words, "Rough Riders."

President Roosevelt, who was the Colonel of the Rough Riders during most of its existence, spoke with a personal feeling. He referred to the Guasimas fight as "the first fight that we saw, the fight in which we served under the after-time Lieutenant General of the United States Army, who is with us here to-day, Gen. Young."

Gen. Young had promised that if the regiment got into his brigade he would see that it got into the first fight, and, said the President, turning to Gen. Young, "you kept your word."

The President spoke of the bitter grief any war entails.

"The deepest woe, however," he declared, "the grief hardest to bear, must come to those who do not go to war, but the women and children who stay behind. The greatest sacrifices in war are made not by those who go to the front, who know the eager excitement of battle, and who if they are worthy to be called men at all, feel the most buoyant exaltation in the good fortune which has given them the chance to show their manhood on stricken fields. Our sympathy is not for them, but for those whose harder task it is to wait at home, uncheered by the stern joy of battle, and who have to meet with as brave a front as may be the news, good or ill, that comes from the front."

He said the sons of those who had worn the Blue and the sons of those who had worn the Gray fought together, side by side, with Young and Chaffee, and Lawton, and had served under Wheeler and Fitzhugh Lee. They "stood shoulder to shoulder, knit together by the closest of ties and acknowledged with respect to one another only that generous jealousy, each to try to be first to do all that in him lay for the honor and the interest of the flag that covered the reunited country."

The President declared there was another lesson taught by every war well waged, taught pre-eminently by the Civil War, but taught also by any lesser war as that in which the regiment had been engaged. That was the lesson of real democracy, which consisted in treating each man in good faith on his worth as a man.

"The man you cared for," the President said, "was the man who did his ordinary plain duty right along, just as it came, from digging sinks and policing camp to leading a forlorn hope.

"Distrust the men who seek to get you to favor them or discriminate against them, either because they are well off or not well off, because they occupy one social position or another, because they live in one part of the country or another, or because they profess one creed or another. Remember this: Arrogance and envy are not different qualities; they are merely different manifestations of the same qualities. The rich man who looks down upon or oppresses the poor man is the very man who, if poor, would envy and hate the man who was richer. Conversely, the poor man who regards with bitter and malignant envy the man who is better off, who preaches the doctrine of hate toward that man, is himself the man who, if it happened that he were rich, would grind down the faces of those who were less well off than he."

Especial reference was made to Capt. Capron and Capt. O'Neill, who were killed in Cuba.

BONAPARTE SUMS UP.

Final Argument as to Employers' Liability Heard by the Supreme Court.

WASHINGTON, April 12.—Attorney General Bonaparte argued before the Supreme Court to-day in the employers' liability cases, and his address closed the hearing. He asked for a liberal construction of the statute, and declared that the railroads should not be permitted to be a law unto themselves.

He contended that the Government has a right to regulate the agents of commerce under the general constitutional power to regulate commerce itself, and that this power could be extended so as to provide for the protection of men employed on inter-State railroads, notwithstanding the fact that their employment should not take them outside of any given State.

DAIRYMEN UP IN ARMS.

Resent Local Interference on the Question of Milk Supply.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., April 12.—"Dr. Thomas Darlington's Inspectors wearing his badge are trespassers, pure and simple. Farmers may safely pitch them into the highway, where they belong, badge and all, at the toe of a cowhide boot if necessary."

This declaration was made to-day by O. W. Mapes, head of the Dairymen's League, which has been organized to control the milk market of New York City. Mr. Mapes further says that the only way New York City could retaliate for the kicking out of its Inspectors would be to revoke the license of the Borden Milk Company to sell milk in the city, and that this is out of the question, since New York cannot get along without the Borden Company's supply.

In six months the Dairymen's League expects to control all the milk sent into the city from New York State, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Connecticut.

Commissioner Darlington of the Department of Health heard of Mr. Mapes's statement yesterday, and said:

"What can I say to that? It's rot! I don't care to answer this man. Names mean nothing to me. I'm not fighting windmills. That statement isn't a marker to some of the letters I receive. It's a mild affair. We expect criticism, and we get it.

"I had to have my telephone number taken out of the telephone book because people called me up in the middle of the night to make a complaint. Some of them called me up as late as 5 o'clock one morning lately to inform me that 'foul language was coming up his airshaft.'

"We care nothing for the vituperation of a man. We go right on, doing our duty the best we know how. We have already inspected 1,800 dairies in the State, and we are going right on to inspect the rest of them. We're seeing to it that the dairies are kept clean."

TO DEVELOP AFRICAN MINES.

Guggenheim Exploration Party Ready to Start for the Congo.

A. Chester Beatty, of the Guggenheim engineering staff, who went abroad over a month ago to organize the first exploration party for the location of copper and other minerals on the Guggenheim-Ryan concessions in the Congo Free State, has returned. He left the neucleus of a thoroughly equipped expedition of engineers and scientists in Belgium, which will set out for Central Africa within a montr or six weeks ready to work in the field for the next two or three years.

This mineral exploration party, which will be entirely separate from the staff which will develop the rubber concessions of the syndicate, will be headed by Dorsey Mohun, ex-United States consul at Boma, at the mouth of the Congo. Mr. Mohun has an intimate acquaintance with the natives and the country, gained in many years spent in Equatorial Africa. In addition to his commercial familiarity with the region as United States Consul, he has had active adventures as a member of the Belgian force, which put down the Arab slave traders. With him will go from Europe a force of ten white engineers and scientists. The party will go by steamer up the Congo River to the head of navigation, proceeding further in small boats to the mountain districts, where most of the field work of the geologists will be done. The geological branch of the expedition will be in charge of L. H. Boll, a well-known mineralogist.

COURT DISCHARGES BOXERS.

Detectives Unable to Show That Longacre Club Sold Fight Tickets.

William Cullen, Frankie Howe, and Michael J. Newman were discharged by Magistrate Whitman in Jefferson Market Court yesterday on the charge of violating Section 458 of the Penal Code by taking part in a prize fight. The detectives were unable to produce any evidence of the sale of tickets. Cullen and Howe were scheduled to give a bout on Thursday night before members of the Long Acre Athletic Club, at 158 West Twenty-ninth Street, and were in the ring when Detectives James and William Murphy of the West Thirtieth Street Station entered and arrested them. Newman is the manager of the club.

Manager Newman produced a certificate showing that the club was incorporated as an athletic club on March 18, 1905. He also handed to the Magistrate a transcript of a hearing before Magistrate Barlow when the club was raided by the police on a previous occasion, when they were also discharged. Newman told the court that the club had 395 members.

"Do the members pay to get in?" asked the Magistrate.

"No; you couldn't get in yourself, your honor," replied Newman.

"No, I'm pretty sure I could not," remarked the Magistrate. He then told the detectives that they had done all they could to enforce the law, and ordered the men discharged.

SLOCUM FIRE HERO DEAD.

Only Major, an Ambulance Horse, but He Saved Many Lives.

Major, the big dapple gray horse which for three years had been the pride of the Flower Hospital staff and was hailed as the "hero of the Slocum disaster," is dead. He was the fastest horse the hospital ever had, and a most intelligent animal.

The doctors say Major was a victim of "mud fever," due to the atrocious condition of the streets. Major had been forced to travel night and day of late. A veterinary was nnable to give any relief, and on Thursday night Major had to be shot.

The best work the horse ever did was on the day of the Slocum disaster. Major was the first on the spot, and with Driver Dan Rice did yeoman service in hauling victims to the hospitals. It is said of the horse that he seemed to feel that in his fleetness of hoof there perhaps lay life for the sufferers he was hauling.

On Feb. 15 last Major took the ambulance, carrying a man who was thought to be bleeding to death, from the Grand Central Station to Flower Hospital, in Sixty-third Street, in two and one-half minutes. The doctors say this speed undoubtedly saved the man's life. All declared they believed the horse had knowledge that human life was at stake when he was called upon to extend himself.

GRAVES'S SCHEME CALLED ABSURD

Congressman Hay Declares the People Have Not Benefited by Roosevelt's Policies.

PRESIDENT NO DEMOCRAT

Ship Subsidy, Anti-Trust and Railroad Rate Legislation as His Critics View it.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 12.—A Democratic Congressman came to town to-day who talked very warmly about the suggestion of the Georgia editor, John Temple Graves, that William J. Bryan in the next National Democratic Convention should nominate Theodore Roosevelt for President. It was Representative James H. Hay of the Seventh, or Shenandoah Valley, District of Virginia. Mr. Hay is serving his seventh term in the House, and is one of the leading Democrats in Coogress.

"It is the sheerest nonsense," he said of the Graves suggestion. "It is the absurdest thing in politics I have heard, except possibly the story of the $5,000,000 conspiracy to defeat President Roosevelt and his policies. It is impossible that any Democrat in a National Democratic Convention should nominate President Roosevelt. His record is anything but Democratic. His policies, however well meant, are not Democratic, and I cannot see how any one calling and feeling himself a Democrat can admire, or respect, or commend what we understand is the Roosevelt way of conducting the Government.

"Take the ship subsidy, which Roosevelt supports. There is not a single Democratic idea in that business. If there is a Democratic idea left in the country, it is opposed to the ship subsidy and all other subsidies.

"How does Mr. Roosevelt appeal to Democrats as a tariff reformer? If he ever was inclined in that direction it was when he wrote books, as a youth, at the same time that he anathematized Thomas Jefferson and others of our greatest Democratic statesmen. Throughout the six years of the Roosevelt Administration he has been as unyielding a standpatter as Speaker Cannon, Payne, Dalzell, or any of the rest of them.

"President Roosevelt has very ostensibly made war on the trusts. I would like to know wherein from his method of attacking trusts and monopolies the people of the country have been substantially benefited. What is the article of trust production the price of which has been reduced to the consumer by trust-busting of the Roosevelt kind?

"The Republican Party has fried the fat for campaign purposes out of these trusts and monopolies, and at the last election, notwithstanding Mr. Roosevelt's denial that the money was used for improper purposes, his National Campaign Committee solicited and received and used money obtained from the trusts and other corporations.

"And all this talk of railroad regulation through Roosevelt policies makes me tired. If there be glory in it for Roosevelt, where is the benefit to the people? What freight or passenger rate has been reduced by it? And what is the ultimate purpose of the Roosevelt railroad policy but to strike down all State participation in rate regulation and to concentrate all railroad regulation here in Washington?

"If I were talking to an audience of Southern Democrats, I think I would remind them of some things in Roosevelt's record which some Democrats down our way seem to have forgotten. I would recall to them that the negro school teacher, Booker Washington, as recognized by President Roosevelt, has claims of consideration as an adviser superior to those of United States Senators who happen not to agree with the President in patronage affairs, as notably in the case of Alabama and Ohio.

"I would recall the Crum appointment, the Indianola Post Office suspension, and I would remind Southern people that he had spoken in public of Southern soldiers as no better than Anarchists, as he did in a speech at Arlington Cemetery, with the graves of Confederate soldiers in sight of him."

REVERSES GRAVES'S PLAN.

Hendricks Club Says Roosevelt Should Nominate Bryan.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., April 12.—The Hendricks Club, the largest Democratic organization in the State, while celebrating the birthday of Thomas Jefferson tonight, adopted the following resolution and telegraphed it to John Temple Graves of Atlanta:

"The Hendricks Club of Evansville believes that in the interest of a 'square deal' Roosevelt should nominate Bryan for President in 1908, as there is now no doubt that Bryan was beaten in 1896 by the contribution of money by insurance companies, railroad companies, and tariff-protected moopolies, and that President Roosevelt knows this to be a fact, and that Bryan, in 1896, stood on the platform on which Roosevelt now stands on railroad regulation."

SHIPYARD SUES HARRIMAN.

His Steam Yacht Sultana Libeled for $20,182 for Repairs.

Edward H. Harriman's big steam yacht Sultana was libeled yesterday in the Admiralty Branch of the United States District Court by the Shooter's Island Ship Yard Company, which insists that the sum of $20,182 is due it for repairs on the vessel.

According to White & Case of 31 Nassau Street, proctors for the libelants, Mr. Harriman in November sent the Sultana to the Shooter's Island Ship Yards, in the Kill von Kull, where repairs were ordered amounting to $40,182. The repairs, it is asserted, were necessary and proper, and the charges just and reasonable. The libelants received, it is claimed, $20,000 on account, but that, notwithstanding demands, Mr. Harriman has refused to pay the remaining $20,182 alleged to be due.

The libelants ask that the Sultana be condemned and sold to pay the claim. The complaint was verified by W. D. Dickey, Vice President and General Manager of the Shooter's Island Ship Yard Company. The libel was served yesterday upon Mr. Harriman's personal representative by United States Marshal Henkel personally.

Mr. Harriman will either have to furnish the Marshal a good bond in twice the sum demanded pending the trial, or do without the big Sultana this season. The yacht will probably be bonded and released by Marshal Henkel within a few days.

PAINTERS WILL FIGHT IT OUT.

Strikers Will Try to Get Other Trades to Join in "Sympathetic" Walkout.

By a decision reached yesterday to keep up the strike of the painters on all arbitration contracts in spite of the ultimatum of the General Arbitration Board, the Brotherhood of Painters stands today suspended by the board, the suspension being the same as a lock out of the union. The union has decided to ignore the ultimatum and fight for the new wage scale to a finish.

The success of the strike now depends on the ability of the employers to fill the places of the painters with strike-breakers, and of the painters to induce the other trade unions on arbitration contracts to order their members to refuse to work with non-union men.

The storm centre will be at the Plaza Hotel, in Fifty-ninth Street, an arbitration contract, for which the George A. Fuller Company is the general contractor. Two hundred painters quit work at this building. It was said last night that fourteen strike breakers are employed there, and that a strong attempt will be made this forenoon to induce about three hundred men in other trades who are working on the building, to quit work in "sympathy."

WHITE SALE OVER; BRINGS $51,532

"Portrait of the Earl of Dorset," Sold for $3,200, Highest Price of the Night.

REYNOLDS WENT FOR $3,100

$177,337 Obtained as a Result of the Sale of House Furnishings and Pictures.

The second and last evening of the sale of Stanford White'e pictures at Mendelssohn Hall brought returns of $31,200. This, with the $20,272.50 of the first evening's sale, makes a total for the 125 pictures of $51,532.50, which is considered a very fair average of prices. It is generally understood that the architect purchased his paintings not for the names of artists that they represented, but becauee of their decorative effects and becauee they pleased him.

Many of the pictures were most effectively framed, and there were bidders in the audience last evening who said of some of the picturee that the biggest part of the value was in the frames. There were good pictures, however, and the second highest price of the evening, $3,100, was given by H. Randle for a Sir Joshua Reynolds, a portrait of Miss Ridge, erroneously said at first to be a picture of Kitty Fisher.

This portrait came from the collection of Charles Wertheimer in London, and cost, so Mr. Kirby explained at the sale, $15,000 plus the duty. The executors of the estate guaranteed it to be a Reynolds nnd to have come from the Wertheimer collection.

It brought, however, $100 less than a picture by an unknown artist, a large and attractive "Portrait of the Earl of Dorset," of the early Spanish school, which went to the same buyer, Mr. Randle, for $3,200. The "Portrait of a Young Lady," by Juan Carreno de Miranda, went to T. J. Blakeslee for $2,350; the "Portrait of a Young Girl," by Philip Reinagle, R. A., sold for $1,525; the "Portrait of a Young Lady," early French school, to C. A. Platt for $1,000; "Portrait of Mary Tudor," by Zucchero, brought $1,400. H. Randle paid $1,800 for the "Portrait of a Man," by Moro, and W. Stewert, $1,100 for the "Portrait of a Burgomaster," by Cristoph Amberger. Those were the high prices of the evening.

A large proportion of the portraits in the second sale last evening represented the early French, Spanish, Italian schools, etc. One of the latter, which was catalogued as belonging to the school of Tintoretto, was said by William M. Chase and other authorities to be a genuine Tintoretto. Mr. White, caring less about names than effects, left little data concerning his paintings. This picture, which was a peculiar double "Portrait of Father and Son," was sold twice. It went first for $500, but was claimed by two bidders. It was put up again and went to T. J. Blakeslee for $550.

This sale of picturee brings the total returns for the furniture and decorations of the Stanford White house on Twenty-first Street, with the amount brought by the three daye' sale at the house, $125,804.50, up to $177,377.

BONILLA A CAPTIVE; WAR MAY BE ENDED

Honduran President, Bottled Up at Amapala, Surrenders to Nicaraguans.

WANT PERMANENT PEACE

Central American Republics to Hold a Conference, with This Country and Mexico as Umpires.

WASHINGTON, April 12.—The following cablegram from American Consul Olivares, dated at Managua, the Nicaraguan capital, to-day, has been received at the State Department:

"Amapala, Honduras, has been surrendered by Bonilla, and the war is ended."

That all the Central American republics are looking for an agreement for permanent peace was developed to-day by a general discussion at the State Depaatment. With that end in view, the negotiations for a cessation of hostilities will not go so fer as to take up the eubject of permanent peace, but will leave this broad question to a conference, to be held in Washington or the City of Mexico, in which all of the countries immediately interested may take part. The United States and Mexico, according to the embryonic plans, will occupy the positions of umpires.

The conflict which is now closing has made it apparent to all thet the present unsettled conditions in Central America are nampering the development of that part of the world. The republics not involved in the war kept free with the greatest difficulty, and commercial affairs in all of them were affected. With the United States and Mexico urging the placing of the republics on a firm baeis and with the lessons taught by the present war, there is every indication that a permanent agreement will be reeched.

The plan has not gone far enough for the suggestion of a date for the conference, but it is aseumed that it will not interfere with the conference at The Hague, although the two would not conflict in any woy. Ambassador Creel is said to be father of the idea, but it has the hearty approval of State Department officials. In order that there may be a full attendence of delegatione from all the Central American republics, Mexico City, it is believed here, etands the better chance of getting the conference.

NEW ORLEANS, April 12.—According to a cablegram received by the officials of the Fruit Dispatch Company here, President Manuel Bonilla of Honduras hae surrendered to the Nicaraguan forces. The cablegram came from Managua, Nicaragua, and was signed by President Zelaya.

No details were given other than that Bonilla surrendered yesterdey. Other advices received here yesterday, however, were to the fict that Bonilla had been "bottled up" in the Port of Amapala ever since he made his sensational flight from Choluteca.

SAN SALVADOR, April 12.—The town of Corquin, Honduras, was captured by President Bonilla's forces yesterday. Gen. Carcamo, commanding the attacking force, is advancing into the interior of Honduras. Bonilla's forces occupy many other towns in Honduras.

The revolutionary forces of Honduras are disbanding. Meny families have reached this city, fleeing from the outrages of the invading army.

Salvador has over 18,000 men under arms, and can place a larger army in the field to repel any aggression. Peace in the interior of Salvador is assured, and there is no doubt that the national autonomy will be maintained.

AMERICANS PEACEMAKERS.

Honduran Army Surrenders at Our Suggestion—Bonilla on the Chicago.

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, April 12.—2 P. m.—The Honduran forces who have been besieged in Amapala by the Nicaraguans, capitulated unconditionally this morning to the enemy. President Bonilla has taken refuge on board the American cruiser Chicago, and he will not be permitted to disembark on Central American soil.

The capitulation was arranged by Commander Robert M. Doyle, captain of the Chicago.

The Salvadorean forces who were at Amapala are returning to La Union. Peace is now believed to be assured.

Clergyman a Suicide.

ATLANTA, April 12.—Tre Rev. Frank Riley, formerly a member of the South Georgia Methodist Conference, committed suicide at his home here to-day. He locked himself in his room and turned on the gas. Despondency induced by ill-health is believed to have been the cauee.

Wisconsin Reform at Low Ebb.

MADISON, Wis., April 12.—The State Assembly killed to-day the Senate bill known as the "clean towels law," requiring individual towels and longer sheets at hotels. An attempt to defeat outright the "anti-tights bill" was beaten, and the measure was amended.

PLAN FOR MILLIONS ENDED ONLY IN SUITS

Great Project by J. J. Deery to Redeem Virginia Lands Now in the Courts.

JUDGE PARKER THE REFEREE

Estate of the Late Major John Byrne Sued by Projector and the Lawyers.

Ex-Judge Alton B. Parker, as referee, took testimony yesterday in a suit which ex-Judge John J. Jackson of Parkersburg, West Va., has brought against the estate of Major John Byrne, who died at his home in this city on Oct. 31, 1905, to recover $5,000 which he says is due him for legal services in transactions which Major Byrne had with John Jerome Deery of Philadelphia. Mr. Deery has sued the Byrne estate for $1,650,000, and other suits for $7,000 are pending. Judge Parker is referee in all of them.

The suits grow out of the failure of a project which Mr. Deery had devised to redeem and develop 200,000 acres of land in West Virginia, on which 2,000,000,000 feet of timber are said to be standing, and in which there are, according to estimates supplied by mining engineers to Mr. Deery, at least 3,000,000,000 tons of coal, besides other minerals and natural gae. The plaintiffe allege that Major Byrne had agreed to furnish money for this work, and had retained counsel, but that the estate has refused to make any payments.

Altogether the suits against the estate aggregate $1,657,000. When Major Byrne died it as estimated that his real and personal property were worth between $3,000,000 and $5,000,000, but Frederic W. Frost of counsel for the estate said last night that if the suits succeeded "the estate will be practically wiped out."

Major Byrne, he said, had never made a contract to furnish the eums now claimed, or any sums; that Major Byrne had listened to Mr. Deery's explanation of his project, had been interested, and had said that he would "look into it," but no more than that.

Mr. Deery said last night, explaining his suit, that he bought up the rights of the heirs of the former owners of the 200,000 acree of West Virginia lands about three and a half years ago. The titles to the property ran back to 1795, when two Revolutionary soldiers, Charles Sims and Charles Lee, received the grant of the land from the State of Virginia.

With these rights Mr. Deery came to New York and interested Mayor Byrne, whom he knew as a man of experience in developing timber, oil, and mining properties and building railroads. Mr. Deery says that Mayor Byrne was to put in $150,000 for the expenses incidental to redeeming and getting title to the 200,000 acres. Then he was to advance $1,500,000 for improvements agreed upon. These improvements included the construction of a twenty-four mile railroad, the opening of coal mines, five lumber camps, &c. Deery's contribution was to be the acquired rights and the financial and development scheme.

Judge Jackson, who is at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and who brought suit for legal services, was appointed to the United States Circuit Court by President Lincoln and presided in that court for forty-four years. He is a first cousin of Stonewall Jackson, and is about 82 years old.

The hearing yesterday was held at Judge Parker's office, at 32 Nassau Street. The entire day was occupied by the testimony of John P. McGraw, a lawyer of Webster Springs and Chairman of the Democratic State Committee, and Col. James H. Butt, a lawyer of Parkersburg.

WON GOLD ORATORY PRIZE.

F. A. Higgins Carries Off Medal at Annual Contest at Columbia.

F. A. Higgins of the class of 1908 won the annual contest for the Curtis Oratorical prizes last night at Columbia University. The prizes are two medals, one of gold and one of silver, given yearly by "a friend and admirer of the late George Washington Curtis." The second award was made to B. A. Rosenblatt, 1907. Prof. Franklin H. Giddings presided, and the judges were Prof. Brander Matthews, Prof. George W. Kirchwey, Dean of the Law School, and John B. Pine, clerk of the University Trustees.

Last night's contest was the final one for which the four best speakers had been picked by a preliminary trial. The winning speech was entitled "Aliens and Our Altars," and was a study of the process by which foreigners are made to absorb the spirit of our National life and customs.

BLEW UP SAFE; GOT NOTHING.

Mount Kisco Watchman Exchanged Shots with Post Office Thieves.

MOUNT KISCO, N. Y., April 12.—Burglars visited the Post Office here early to-day and blew open the eafe, but got nothing.

James Platt, a night watchman, was in Joseph Merriman's law office when he heard an explosion. He raised a window, and, looking out, saw a man standing on the corner. The Post Office is in the Griffith Building, about 200 feet distant. Platt asked the man what had caused the noise, and the stranger replied he thought there had been an explosion at the railroad station. The man then started on a run up Main Street and fired a shot in the air, evidently as a warning signal.

Platt hurried to the street and saw two men run out of the rear door of the Post Office and make up Maple Avenue. Platt gave chase and fired two shots at the fugitives, who fired two shots in reply. They got away. The door of the Post Office safe had been blown from its hinges, but otherwise the safe was not much damaged. There were only a few unimportant papers in the eafe.

THE THAW DISAGREEMENT.

The failure of the Thaw jury to agree is an occasion for deep public regret, perhaps for indignation. Twelve reasonable men guided by intelligence and conscience, faithfully obeying the injunctions of Judge FITZGERALD'S charge, it seems to us could not have failed to agree upon some verdict that should have put this depraved prisoner where he would never more be a menace to private morals or human life. A conscientious juror has a right to his opinions, but it is a right to be exercised with reason, with candor, and with regard to the public interest. These jurors had heard the evidence and the arguments. The court in language of unmistakable clearness, in a remarkably able and lucid charge, had pointed out the method they were to pursue in their deliberations. Excluding altogether the supposition of improper motive, we do not see how this jury could have failed to satisfy the demands of justice save through the obstinacy and unreasonableness of a few of its members. Yet the story of the juryroom which we print this morning shows that the twelve were not far from evenly divided between murder in the first degree and acquittal on the ground of insanity. The trial of THAW has occupied nearly twelve weeks. It has cost the county a great sum of money, it has resulted in nauseous and appalling disclosures, we fear it has been the occasion of much defiant perjury, and it comes to nothing. The work must be done again, new cost incurred, the revolting mess stirred anew, and perhaps with no greater probability of definite result. It is shameful and scandalous.

When the jury retired for deliberation they had in their minds the evidence, the arguments, and the clear instructions of the court as to the law and their procedure. They were to put out of their minds sympathy and sentiment; those emotions lie outside the domain of the law. With the character and with the deeds or misdeeds of the murdered man they had nothing whatever to do. Against the delusive and dangerous doctrine of the "unwritten law" the Judge sharply warned them. Statute law rules in this community, and statute law recognizes no right of private vengeance for any wrong. The killing of WHITE by THAW was proved and not denied. Presumptively the killing was murder, and that presumption would be destroyed only by convincing evidence that at the time of the act the mind of THAW was so deranged as to make him legally irresponsible. The law presumed him to be sane, but upon that point much evidence for and against the theory of sanity in the legal sense had been introduced. Judge FITZGERALD, with commendable forethought, admonished the jury that the standing, learning, ability, and the experience of the experts should be weighed by them. "The quality and not the quantity of such evidence is to be considered." The jurors were to bear in mind the fact that the testimony of the experts for the defense could show only the state of THAW'S mind at the time of their examination, but this evidence was competent to assist the jury in reaching a conclusion beyond reasonable doubt as to his sanity or insanity at the time of the homicide.

If, after weighing all the facts and the evidence, the jury reached the conclusion that the prisoner at the time he discharged three shots into the body of WHITE was in such a mental state that he did not know the nature and the quality of the act he was doing and that it was wrong and forbidden by law, then they might find to that effect; but a mere delusion as to the conduct of the deceased would not excuse the homicide unless the delusion was of such a character that "if it had been true it would have rendered the act excusable and justifiable." Proof of partial or incipient insanity was not enough. If the jury acquitted THAW upon the ground of insanity they would state that fact in their verdict. They might convict of murder in the second degree if they believed the act was without deliberation and premeditation; of manslaughter if they were satisfied that the act was committed in the heat of passion and with a dangerous weapon, but without the design to take life.

With these instructions the jury retired to deliberate upon their verdict in one of the most extraordinary cases of which the annals of criminal jurisprudence have any record. It embraced elements of interest that have enchained the attention of the world wherever reports of the proceeding have been accessible. The trial has furnished in abundance reasons that we hope will be availed of for amendment of our procedure. It should have been over in a week. Its tragic and romantic as well as its eordid features have at every moment suggested the danger that considerations foreign to ths case and to the law might lead to a wretched perversion of justice in the result. It has been the general comment that a worse tried case for the defense is not within the public recollection, and the circumstances that provoked thie comment reached their fitting culmination in the eublimated claptrap of Mr. DELMAS'S summing up. Abandoning almost altogether the whole theory and substance of the defense of insanity as evidenced by the character of the witnesses and of the testimony, Mr. DELMAS seemed to have reached the conclusion that he must riek all upon an appeal to the "higher law," a courss that anybody could see was absurd, taking into account the chsracter of hie client and the multitude of proofs that showed the crime to be what Mr. JEROME described it, a vulgar and cowardly Tenderloin murder. By extemporizing for his purposes a new form of insanity, "dementia Americana," and by his picture of the defendant stretching out his arms in the form of a cross just after the deed, a daring invention that nothing but its grotesqueness saved from being blasphemous, Mr. DELMAS stamped his address with a quality that will make it long memorable in the history of crime, of fustian, and of foolishness.

In the Thaw case Mr. JEROME has shown himself to be something more than an able trial lawyer. He has conscientiously tried to do hie full duty, which involves more than the conviction of the prisoner at the bar. He has tried conscientiously to keep the spirit of his oath of office. Convinced during the trial that while in the legal sense the prisoner might have been sane at the time of the homicide—sane, that is, to the extent of knowing the nature of his act and that it was wrong—he was, sitting there in the courtroom, medically insane, and therefore not lawfully triable. It was at this point that he left it "to the conscience of the court" to appoint a commission to inquire into the prisoner's eanity. Previous to that episode he had with diligence and great ability pursued two lines of attack upon the defense's position. He tried to wrest from the experts of the defense the admission that THAW was insane, in which case he could not be tried for his life, but would be put away where he would not be a menace to society. Their caution and skilled evasiveness baffled him. Then he sought with equal diligence and ability to prove by their admissions that THAW was sane during the trial, which would have been likely to impress upon the minds of the jury that he was sane also at the time when he killed WHITE. Much evidence was ruled out, and the commission seemed to the District Attorney to be the only resort open to him. When the commission found the prisoner sane there was nothing left to do but to prosecute the trial to a conclusion. It then became the duty of Mr. JEROME to secure a conviction if possible. Of the testimony it is unnecessary to speak. We trust, however, that no such extraordinary theory of justice as that which permitted the wife of the defendant to tell her preposteroue etory at great length while at the same time forbidding the prosecution to prove it untrue will ever be accepted and acted upon in another murder trial. If such a theory of the causation of ineanity and the justification of killing is permissible, then any woman by telling any sort of wild, fantastic, gruesome tale to one man may cause him to kill another man, and a jury, finding him insane because of her story, may acquit; or a woman skilled in lying, by saying that she told such a tale may cheat justice of its dues. That, we think, is not a safe nnd workable law of evidence, not even though sanctioned by the Court of Appeals.

With deference to the court, there are grave reasons for supposing that the story of EVELYN NESBIT THAW should have been excluded altogether. To permit proof, or attempts at proof, of the insanity of the accused by putting before the jury a etory of wrong said to have been narrated to him, on the theory that if he believed it to be true it would have been likely to cause insanity and would therefore explain his defect of reason and the homicide, is not a safe procedure—it is a highly unsafe and illogical procedure. No English court would have let such a story be told. It would have said to the defense—if, indeed, it had been willing to listen to the plea of insanity—you assert that the prieoner at the bar was insane when he shot down his victim. You will be permitted to prove it by qualified medical testimony and by the evidence of witnesses present and able to describe the acts and behavior of the prisoner at the time of shooting. Insanity is a fact to be established by observation of the person suspected of being insane—not by inference as to the probable effect upon his mind of recitals made to him by others. The fact that THAW permitted his wife to take the stand and subject herself to the shame and humiliation of publicly giving such testimony as this woman gave might in itself be considered as evidence of insanity, but it is manifestly not legal evidence, though it did prove much as to the mind and soul of the man.

We are confident that when this prisoner comes again to the bar a trial Judge who should reduce the case to its lowest terms, to its really very simple structural proportions, would win the applause of the community. A Judge who should insist that the evidence put before ths jury be limited to the determination of the two facts whether THAW did kill WHITE, and, second, whether he was in the meaning of the law sane and responsible for his act, and should exclude from the inquiry as to this second fact the enormous mass of irrelevancies that gave such inordinate bulk to the testimony of the first trial, would make his name noted as the initiator of a very much needed reform in our criminal procedure.

We need not dwell at length upon the character of ths defendant, degenerate, coarse, dissolute, criminal, worthless, without any visible redeeming trait, nor of his victim, a man of unquestioned and brilliant genius, marred by deplorable weaknessss. It has all the time been evident that the safety of the community demanded that THAW should not be at large. We trust that through finding of a second jury or of a second commission hs may be put where he will trouble the community no more.

THE ANTI-SMOKE CAMPAIGN.

As a consequence of the vigorous campaign begun last year by the Anti-Smoke League, the belching of quantities of sooty smoke and cinders from the chimneye of all but the big public service plants in this city has ceased. In its co-operation with the Board of Health the Anti-Smoke Leagus points with pride to 132 convictions resulting from 193 arrests in 1906, and twenty-five cases still pending. The results for 1906 as compared with other years are as follows:

Number of Convictions.
1902	1903	1904	1905	1906
17	46	0	0	132

The chief nuisances are the public eervice corporations, and, with the exception of the Long Island Railroad, they have not been suppressed. Officials of the New York Edison Company have been convicted of violating the Sanitary Code, but the league found that "smoke continued to issus from their premiees in as great volume after the conviction as before," the company holding that it was impossible to operate the plant without the emission of smoke and cinders in prodigious quantities.

With this contention the Anti-Smoke League takes issue. The Edison Company finally undertook a serics of experiments with its furnaces under the advice and suggestion of the league's experts which have thus far been successful. At the close of this test case legal conclusions will be tried with the other big offenders, who now plead helplessness. The work the league is doing in the interest of health and clear skies for the Greater City is to be commended and supported.

LORD CROMER.

Evidently there is no afterthought in the explanation given by Lord CROMER for his retirement from the public service. He retires simply because he has "done." As evidently, there is no afterthought in the praises heaped upon him by both sides in the House of Commons. He is one of the "makers of England," one of the makers of the British Empire. And he does not suffer by comparison with any Clive or Hastings among his predecessors. It is an enormous work that, as Sir EVELYN BARING, as Baron CROMER, and as Earl CROMER he has been doing in Egypt for this last quarter of a century. Sir EDWARD GREY simply expressed the feeling of all England when he declared that the retirement of Lord CROMER was "the greatest personal loss the public service of the country could suffer."

And it is a service to Egypt not less than to England. Almost more. He has been doing far better, for this quarter of a century, as the British "receiver for the benefit of creditors" than any Egyptian had ever done, better for the felaheen, better for all classes of Egyptians except the Egyptian "ring" of public plunderers and public oppressors. Nevertheless, it seems that he has not been popular in Egypt. It is one of the factors of his great success that he has not cared whether or not he was popular so long as he was quite sure that he was right. And it is not without significance that his last official act should have been the entry of his protest against granting the measure of self-government which they demanded to the people whom he has governed so much more to their benefit and advantage than they had ever been governed before since the days of RAMESES or PHARAOH.

There is a lesson in this for us. England is by so much the greatest and most succeseful of nations in dealing with inferior races since Rome that we cannot do better, as entire novices in that business, than to take her for our model. And when one of her greatest and most successful colonial administrators so strongly deprecates the indiscriminate application of the "consent of the governed," we may be fairly sure that there is something in what he says.

BASEBALL AND THE POLICE.

It appears that certain baseball "cranks" are disposed to blame Commissioner BINGHAM for not preventing certain other or possibly the same baseball enthusiasts from overrunning the grounds and breaking up the first game of the baseball season. This is not only unjust but absurd. In the first place, the Commissioner is bound by a clear legal prohibition from furnishing the public force for the policing of private grounds. He has no choice in the matter. He had given notice to the lessees of the grounds that they must provide their own force to maintain order, which he was not bound to do. And he had at the same time given orders to his own force that they were not to enter the grounds except in case of an actual breach of the peace, which he was bound to do.

But even if he had had a choice he would have deserved commendation instead of censure for the course he took. Like every other Police Commissioner, he has complained of the weakening of the police force by "details" for work which ought to be done by private persons and at private expense. But, unlike most Commissioners, he has taken active measures to prevent the continuance of that abuse. Nothing is clearer than that a person who assembles a crowd for his own profit ought to pay out of his profits for the keeping of order among that crowd. The expense of that process is one of his necessary expenses, and ought to be reckoned as euch. It ie absurd that he should be allowed to charge this item of his expense account over to the public. The public ought not to stand the imposition of this addition to its necessary burdens. In refusing to stand it, Commissioner BINGHAM shows himself once more a faithful public servant.

On the plea of flood prevention and public health the Adirondack power companies ask the State to submerge its Forest Preserve with storage reservoirs. Their object is to develop power. Chief Engineer ALFRED BROOKS FRY has just declared that a storage reservoir cannot serve its purpose and be used for power development, for the very simple reason that a flood should find it empty. The private interests of the power companies are diametrically opposed to the public interest which they ostensibly eeck to protect.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Rhodesians Unduly Alarmed.

A letter received by The Columbia (S. C.) State from the mother of a "Rhodes scholar" now in Oxford, reveals the appearance there of a curious problem. It eeems that among the scholars sent from Pennsylvania is a young negro, and his appearance at Oxford has set those of the Americans who are from the South to wondering how they should trest him. Some of them have evsn gone so fsr as seriously to meditate withdrawal from the university, for fear that if they remain there their presence will be interpreted as an acknowledgment by them of the black man's social equality.

The mother who writes the letter apparently thinks, or at least fears, that some such action may be necessary, and she wants advice, both for herself and for her son. The State gives it—extremely good advice, too. The question raised, it says, is interesting, but not at all difficult. While believing in the maintenance of a sharply drawn color and race line in the South, The State declares that this is not due to any speciel antipathy of the Southerner to the negro, but simply to the fact that the local conditions are such as to make failure thus to draw the line fatal to the superior race. The need for stern separation is less in Virginia or Maryland, still lese in the North, and almost non-existent in a country like England, where there ars not enough men with colored skins to be in any way dangerous. "The environment and conditions of the South are absent, and the attitude of the Southerner becomes automatically that of the Englishman, just as the Englishman or the New Englander, coming to abide in the South, is immediately influenced by the spirit that raises the barrier between the races."

Therefore The State concludes that "the Southerner at Oxford should regard the entrance of a negro into the university as he would the coming of a South Sea Islander, a Malayan, or a Chinaman. His caste is unsseailed, he has no battle to wage for race eupremacy, no vexing problems to ponder, and the comings and goings of brown, red, black, or yellow men are to him matters of absolute indifference. He may even journey into the countries of the Africans and be the guest of black potentates, voluntarily breaking bread with them on terms of equality, without surrendering one jot of Southern opposition to social equality in America. In Rome we do as the Romans, not through a spirit of imitativeness but because we have the environments of the Romans, and what they do is the more natural." That, so far as we can see, is all right; at any rate, it is all right as advice to the Rhodeelans in regard to the policy they should adopt toward their black companion.

"Straight" Whisky and Other.

Those who think, and they are probably numeroue, that "etraight" whisky is somehow superior to whisky that has been more or leee doctored up and ephisticated will hear with delight the news that since the pure-food law went into effect there hae been an enormoue increaee in the amount of the vivacious liquid which is bottied and eold in what may be called its original form, and a correeponding decrease in the amount that has been used merely to flavor less-expensive forms of grain alcohol.

Realization of the fact that whisky labeled as imitation whisky or as a mixture of whieky and something else will be extremely hard to sell, the dealers eeem for the moet part to have reacbed a determination to do what hitherto so many of them have only pretended to do—that is, to keep a close relation between the contents and the labele of their bottlee. Thie, as coinciding with the noble principle announced by Senator BEVERIDGE—"the man who pays hie money has a right to get what he paye for"—is highly to be commended, but we have more than a euepicion that the social and economic effects of the honestly labeled "etuff" will be about those with which observers of the conequencee of drinking etrong epirite have long been familiar.

Alcohol is aicohol, a thing of many kinds to the chemist; but of only two to common people. One of the two kinde ie a quickly fatal poieon, eo it hardly counts from thie point of view. The other, distilled from grains, if called whisky, when reasonably pure differs except to the taste, and not always or for by any means everybody in even that respect, chiefly in degree of dilution. But "straight" whisky can be of pretty dreadful quality, even from the whisky drinker's standpoint, as most experimenters with "moonshine" have found out, while "blends," and even shameless imitations, can have certain elements of alcoholic grandeur, and at least do no more harm than their nominal betters.

Surviving as a Name.

Mr. CARNEGIE has naturally given much thought as to what happens to those who try to immortalize their names by founding educational and other praiseworthy institutions, and, being a shrewd and intelligent person, he has noticed several curious things that have hitherto escaped general attention. He mentioned one of the queerest of them in his Pittsburg speech—and did it a little mournfully, one may guess.

It was when he referred to the after days "when the founder becomes merely a name, as Harvard and Yale and Cornell." He might have eaid "becomee merely a geographical or place name." Of course we all know that the universities at Cambridge and New Haven and Ithaca bear the names of men, but we know it only when we etop to think, and at other timee we use the words without the slightest appreciation of their personal content. So it ie true that the names of these three men have been "immortalized," but it is only in a way and a degree, neither really satisfactory to a hungerer after deathlese fame, that the men themeelves bave been put beyond the reach of oblivion, the common fate.

In what Mr. CARNEGIE called "the daye to come his name will be well known, but it will be used exactly as is that of Yale and Harvard. It will, however, probably escape the loss of its capital letter, as did not that of HANEOM and Dr. GUILLOTIN and DAGUERRE and many another helper or harmer of the human race.

FOXES AND THE HEN ROOST.

Money Spent for Fox Hunting Might Save Some Birds.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue to-day appears a letter from Mr. G. O. Shields, President of the League of American Sportsmen, which I read with much interest.

I thoroughly agree with Mr. Shields that our song birds should be protected, and even the gray squirrels, which are often troublesoms on a farm, add somewhat to the sttractions of country life, and I rsrely disturb them.

But in thie section of Long Island there is a much graver problem, and the solution of this may turn the energies of some of our rich neighbors in a direction which should be more pleasing to Mr. Shields.

My family and many of our neighbors hsve been very heavy losers of poultry through the depredations of foxes, and, although we have done much in attempting to rid ourselves of these animals, it seems to be the old story of the struggle of the poor against the rich, for our woods are restocked for each hunting season, and the foxes seem to become constantly more numeroue.

We have in our possession a wooden box with two runwaye, which we recently dug out of the earth in the woods. This box bore unmistakable evidence of having been used as an artificial burrow for breeding foxes, and there are probably many others like it which we have not yet discovered.

Thie worse than useless fad of fox-hunting, carried on in this way, gives amusement to a few rich men and women, members of clubs organized for this purpose, and cauees loss to many who keep entirely within their rights as property holders and good, useful citizens. If the money spent in this way and the money lost by the innocent victims could be diverted to legitimate purposes, as set forth by Mr. Shields, it should do much to further his cause.

CHARLES J. KINSOLVING, JR.
Syosset, Long Island, April 7, 1907.

Reproaches Father Prout.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On the editorial page of THE TIMES last Friday, April 5, appears a letter from the Rev. John T. Prout of St. John's Rectory, New York, which is certainly a eurprising and interesting contribution of private opinion from a theologian and a priest, relative to the propriety of monetary contributions at tha time of an election campaign.

As a policy holder I do not consider the President or any official of the insurance companies sinless or free from the crime of dishonesty after contributing the company's money for political purposes. If they are so kind and good as to donate a percentage of the large annual salary they receive of course they would be considered generous, but when they give part of that which is only intrusted to them, I think their consciences should worry them.

Had the recent Insurance Investigating Committee learned of the existence of a Catholic Church campaign fund perhaps some of its officers would have been called upon to declare what amount was contributed toward the election of 1904.

It is rather extraordinary to behold a clergyman volunteering so boldly and publicly to maintain and defend the impropriety and injustice of large salaried officials some of whom have resigned their honored position with insurance companies, probably through a sense of some respect, after they were forced to publicly confess their sinful deeds.

On Hot Cross Buns.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have intentionally waited until after Good Friday to write this article eo that it would not interfere in any way with the eales at bakeries and elsewhere. And now I can ask with impunity, "Do devout persons really find they can gain any spiritual help on that day, so conspicuous for its hallowed memories, by regaling themselves with sugar-covered dainties with the sacred sign of the cross thereon?" And for those who are not devout, wouldn't they enjoy tha same dainties just as much any other day, minus the aforesaid sign? Let us not be moral cowards in this matter for the sake of long-standing custom, and for those who care at all for appearances, would it not look better, to say the least, to show one's religious devotion by attending a short service, or any other form of true worship either at home or in one of the many edifices thrown open to the public?

A WOULD-BE REFORMER.
Newark, N. J., April 5, 1907.

Thanks and Some More.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Thanks for your editorial this morning on the question of teachers' salaries. It is the sanest and most powerful statement of the case which has so far appeared in print.

The facts, however, warrant one in going a step further: Suppose the men had submitted to tha women a proposition that they join forces in an endeavor to obtain a salary increase for all, proportioned to the increase in the cost of living, and that the women bad spurned the offer, declaring that it was the principle for which they were working, not the money, and that they would be willing to accept the salaries they are now receiving—provided the men got no more than they! Would not their case totter not alone "on its economic foundations," but also on those of consistency and common sense?

Make Thaw Jurors Immune.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Would it not be a graceful recognition of civic service faithfully performed for the people of New York to relieve the jurors of the Thaw trial from further obligation of such nature?

The period and circumstances of the arduous duty imposed upon these twelve unfortunate men probably outweigh what most of us are subject to in a lifetime, and who can tell what the conseqnences are for some of them!

Will THE NEW YORK TIMES give currency and indorsement to this suggestion?

TO PREVENT TUBERCULOSIS.

An Appeal to the Labor Unions from the Charity Organization Society.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

For three years and more ths trades unions have been coming in on the fight against consumption, and now thie year in New York City we find them joining forcee with us stronger than ever, and in a way which is bound to have considerable effect on this great problem of the prevention of this terrible but preventable disease. In place of ignoranoe and indifference, at the present rate we shall soon have a public which knows that consumption can be prevented, that it can be cured, and that it ie foolish and worse to put off an honeet snd real attempt to get well; that "sure cures" for consumption are merely methode of obtaining money under falee pretenses, that consumption is caused by a germ, and that it is courting death to allow a conesumptive who will not take care of his germ-laden sputum to epit on the floor of one's shop or home. Theee things ws are getting before the unions of this city by meane of ehort talks, many of them illustrated with stereoptican views. Take, for instance, our record in this respect for the first week in April; we were given the privilege of the floor at tbe following unions: German Bricklayers' Union No. 11, Carpenters and Joiners' No. 715, United Hebrew Trades, Marble Cutters and Setters, United Upholsterers' Union No. 44, Cloak and Skirt Makers' Union, Tool and Die Workers' No. 460, Carpenters and Joiners' No. 1,548, Paintere, Decorators and Paperbangers' No. 442, Painters, Decorators and Paperhsngers' No. 490, Brotherhood of Bookbindere' No. 9, International Association of Machinists' No. 402, New York City Lodge No. 404, I. A. M.; United Derrickmen, Riggers and Pointers' Association No. 4, Rockmen and Excavators Unions Nos. 10,630 and 10,631, Typographical Union No. 6, and United Teamsters of America No. 462.

This means that the sacrifice of over 10,000 livee to this preventable disease which we eee going on in New York City every year is to be stopped, that the trades unions of this city are going to hold up the hands of the public authorities in their attempt to stamp out consumption, and that there will be in the future a more vigoroue and determined demand for thorough-going factory, tenement house, and Board of Health regulations.

But we cannot be satisfied with what is being done. After all, snd in spite of the numbers who have given us a hearing, far more unions are on the other side and have still not responded to our request for permission to address them. We want to have extended to us the privilege of the floor by every union in this city. We will furnish a speaker in any language desired, and when our lantern is not in use at other lectures we will illustrate our talke with stereopticon viewe, all entirely at our own expense. It is to the unions' own interest to learn of this preventable disease that at present is causing them far more loss in members' lives and union funds than sny other one csuse. A letter to the undersigned giving date and hour at which our committee may appear will receive prompt attention.

PRESIDENT AND EDITORS.

Southern Papers Remark on The Times's Symposium.

From The Nashville Banner.

THE NEW YORK TIMES is greatly impressed by the popularity of Theodore Roosevelt, which, it says, "is the most remarkable social and political phenomenon in this Republic to-day." This popularity of the President, THE TIMES says, "is growing and he is stronger with the people than ever before." Our New York contemporary seems to have reached this conclusion mainly because of a number of responses it has received from the editors of Republican newspapers in reply to letters requesting their opinions as to whether President Roosevelt is as popular and as strong generally as he was at the time of his election. Letters were addressed to 500 Republican editors, Monday of last week, and up to Sunday sixty-eight answers had been received and nearly all of these answers were to the effect that Mr. Roosevelt is stronger with the people than ever before.

From The Montgomery Journal.

THE NEW YORK TIMES has been taking a census of the Republican editors and finds practically all of them wedded to Theodore Roosevelt, despite his faults and breaks and the enemies he has made, and it predicts, if the editors represent public sentiment, that Roosevelt will be renominated despite himself in 1908. It is interesting to note how THE TIMES puts it. It describes the conditions graphically if its conclusions are not correct.

Knoxville Journal and Tribuna.

THE NEW YORK TIMES and The New York Herald, neither of them Roosevelt papers, have been sounding public sentiment to see how popular the President is, and if he is as popular as he was when he was elected President. In both cases the investigations made by these papers show that Roosevelt has lost none of his popularity, but that, on the contrary, he has gained instead of lost.

After making the investigation they did, these papers, neither of them being Roosevelt papers, as already stated, express the opinion that the people of the country have lost no confidence in the President, and that the masses are as true to him as they ever have been. They believe him to be their friend, and have seen nothing in his official life to shaka or changa that belief. It is without douht the truth that, had they the opportunity of doing so, thousands of men who did not vote for him in 1904 would do so now.

From The Utica Observer.

That was a commendable piece of enterprise which THE NEW YORK TIMES undertook and carried through one day lately—that of seeking opinions from 500 Republican editors concerning the present strength of the President as compared with the past. If the answers THE TIMES publishes are a fair expression of the views of all these editors—though the silence of so many does not favor that interpretation—then Theodore Roosevelt is really stronger to-day than when he was chosen President in 1904. He wss certainly stronger then than when he was elected Vice President in 1900, and stronger then than when he was elected Governor in 1898. There appears to be a steady gain in popularity through his whole Presidential career—a popularity for which he laid the foundations by the general excellence of his Administration while serving as Chief Magistrate of the State of New York.

A Loyal Briton Protests.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Under the heading "Denies Our Obligation to England" your correspondent, Mr. W. J. Hanna, in issua of March 31 makes what I call an unprovoked attack upon Britain, my native country, and as it is not only equivocal and evasive, may I ask through your most influential paper if he will pleass to name specifically what in England has got on his nervee? Since the times when George III. reignsd—and be was a lunatic during considerable periods—I have no remembrance of anything of consequence worth noting as a cause of quarrel, witb the exception of President Cleveland's manifesto with regard to Venszuela, when many Americans were ruined on your Stock Exchanges, which uncalled-for attack was met so nobly and with dignity by the late Lord Salisbury. If Mr. Hanna will define complsints regarding the United Kingdom one can then reply to them.

THE COURT OF THE POOR.

More Judges Would Improve Conditions Now Intolerable.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May I call attention to a bill now pending in the Legislature wbich offers a thoroughgoing relief for tho preeent intolerable condition of our municipal courts? The subject is such an important one that it should receive much more public attention thsn it has.

The bill to which I refer le one drafted by the Citizens' Union, and which has the indorsement of organizations like the City Club, the Bar Association, of the Municipal Court bench itself, and of several Judges of ths Supreme Court, like Judges Ingraham and Scott, who are familiar from experience with tho present condition of the Municipal Court Justice. The bill makes a much-needed increase of Justices in the court, redistricts the city on sensible lines, and does away with the intolerable waste of time to which litigants and lawyers are now put before tbey can get their cases tried.

The Municipal Court is one of the most important courts in the city. It does more tusiness by far than the Supreme Court itself, and if the public were thoroughly familiar with the actual conditions of tbe "poor man's" court to-day, the purely partisan political influences which are now at work attempting to defeat this measure would be overwbelmed by general public disapproval.

Let me give an illustration from my own experience of this week, which I think is a characteristic one, showing tbe present disadvantage whicb the poor man has in seeking justice in a very large number of these Municipal Courts. Monday of this week, for the second time, a case in which I am interested as counsel for defendant was on the calendar of the Fourth District Municipal Court, at Second Avenue and First Street. The action was one by a former employe of a corporation to recover from it a deposit made by the employe as security for his honest and faithful conduct while at work. Irrespective of the merits of the controversy it will be admitted by any one that the question of this man's rigbt to the return of his deposit should be speedily determined in court, and what was actually due him ascertained. The defendant was equally willing to have the matter tried, and is not seeking delay.

This is what has happened. This man has spent two working days, worth to him $2 each, sitting around in that court, while the Judge has struggled with a congested calendar, and tbe case bas not yet been reached. On Monday (the second of these days) he sat, I am told, from 9 o'clock until 3:40, an entire working day lost, simply becsuee there was so much court business ahead of his case that it could not be reached. At 3:40 the Judge announced that he would not be able on tbat day to dispose of eleven cases which then remained untried on his calendar.

When this announcement was made, some thirty or forty people who had been sitting all day as litigants or witnesses left to come another day and go through the same process of delay, linger and wait, in the hope that ultimately a tired, overworked Judge would reach their cases. The wage loss of the people I saw go out of that court could not have been less than $30, and the loss was to people on whom it fell as a bitter load. The Judge himself who presided that day was in my opinion then working so fast, trying to dispose of the accumulation of businee before him, that it was impossible that he could give anything like adequate consideration to the cases which he tried.

This is not an extraordinary illustration of the present condition of our municipal courts, but is, in my opinion, a typical one. No one needs better justice or quicker justice than the very poor man, and it is a scandal and outrage that general public indifference has permitted conditions to exist in his court which practically prevent anything like adequate justice being done in his case. It is always easy to arouse interest in our higher courts, both in the selection of Judges and their organization as courts. Is it too much to ask that the same public attention should be aroused which shall result in the correction of the abuses now far too prevalent in the court of the poor?

The bill which the Citizens' Union hss drafted is an excellent piece of constructive legislation and of the utmost public importance. It is to be hoped that sufficient interest can be aroused in it so that the present intolerable conditions can be wiped out.

TRANSFERS OF REAL ESTATE.

To Introduce the Torrens System Would Be Laborious and Expensive.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Some statement about "Mobilization of Real Estate," which you make with reference to the Torrens system of title transfer to-day, will be misunderstood.

The Doomsday Book contains digests of surveys of all the lands in England, with records of their ownership; it was completed in the first place during the reign of William the Conqueror.

The ancient Catester Books of Germany are very similar to the English, but their use by realty owners is made compulsory by the authorities.

As the names indicate, the books originated in a desire to apportion the proper tax on every piece of ground.

These books have been carefully kept since; every important change in value and every transfer is ecrupulouely recorded in them, so that entries in these books are generally considered primafacie evidence of the titles.

To introduce a similar system here would involve more labor and greater expense than friends of the measure anticipate. More transfers of realty are made here in one year than are made in Europe in ten.

When transfers of land are made in Illinois, Oregon, and Massachusette, where the Torrens plan has been adopted, the States cannot assume a liability for correction of the search, because no funds are provided for this purpose. Their searchers fail to take notice of any improvements on the land.

MY TENANT.

It was a humble parasite,
Far emaller than a flea,
Who came upon a Winter's night
And rented rooms in me.
I knew not wbere he went to dine
Nor how he spent tbe day,
But soon within this frame of mine
The devil was to pay.

Along my Ego's thoroughfare
A whirlwind seemed to pass;
A sense of terror raised my hair,
My eoul grew sick, alae!
I shivered with unholy pain,
I burned with inward fire,
And not a doctor could explain
The while their bills ran higher.

They murmured Latin names galore,
Then guessed again in Greek,
And wrote prescriptions by the score
Of words they could not speak.
And finally 'twas put to rout—
My tenant had to skip—
And then it was that I found out
The beast was called La Grippe.

WROTE IT THEMSELVES

Committee of Eight Young Women Prepared the Libretto—Music Composed by Miss Hollingsworth.

An original comic opera, entitled "Bonds and Balloons," will be produced on Tuesday afternoon and evening next at the Carnegie Lyceum by well-known young women in society. The music was composed specially for the production by Miss Grace Hollingsworth, and a committee of eight girls—the Misses Mary Cozine Lefferts, Gillian Barr, Helen Ludington, Emily Grugan, Ruth Ashmore, Grace Henry, and Katharine Tweed—wrote the libretto.

The scene is laid on the planet Mars, and girls will impersonate both men and women. Miss Constance Pratt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dallas Bache Pratt, will be Venus. Miss Kate Bushnell is to be the Czar, who is eventually blown up by a bomb. Miss Alice Anderton will impersonate Cupid, in a Buster Brown costume. Miss Gladys Waterbury will take the part of Mars, and Miss Eleanor Townsend will travesty Santos-Dumont in the part of Santos-Didmont. Miss Gladys Endicott is to be Philippe, the jealous lover, in a mad scene, and Miss Mary Hazard will be "Cloudy."

The composers and singers are all members of the alumnae of the Spence School, and the proceeds of the opera are to go to a class of crippled children in the Henrietta Industrial School, in West Sixty-third Street. The tickets are in charge of Miss Christine Roosevelt, 804 Fifth Avenue.

SOCIETY IN VAUDEVILLE.

"A Grand Opera Party" Produced at Carnegie Hall.

One of the novel events of the society season was the "Grand Opera Part," presented last night in the Chamber Music Room of Carnegie Hall for the benefit of the West Side Juvenile Club. The entertainment was arranged by Miss Frances Hoppin, Mrs. Edward McVickar, Miss Beatrice Pratt, Miss Isabelle Tilford, Miss Anna Constable, William F. Beekman, Langdon Geer, Frederick S. Hoppin, Jr., Harold Imbrie, Arthur C. Nash, and Gardner B. Perry. Many of the characters portrayed were taken from the various operas given this season ut ths eMtropolitan and Manhattan Opera Houses. Messrs. Conried and Hammerstein were represented by Kenneth Murchison and Mr. Schrieber.

The opening piece on the programme was a song by Mr. Vannoh, a monologue by Miss Draper, and a dance by Miss Dorothy Roosevelt and Mr. Perry. They appeared as opera singers in their number, and applied for positions in grand opera.

Then Howard Borden played on twenty instruments. He was followed by a Japanese dance by Miss Lucy Blair, Miss Alice Fellowes, Miss Dorothea Wardwell, and several others. The "Merry Villagers," an opera comique, was presented by Messrs. Bartow and Brown. "A Débutante at the Opera" was the title of a clever monologue given by Miss Ruth Hubbell.

A feature of the programme was the Pagliacci dance, which was executed by Miss Olivia Hitchcock, Miss Jacquelin Kelley, L. M. Dickinson, A. A. Fowler, and H. D. Buckley.

Mrs. Henry Sples Kip won much applause by a popular song. This number was followed by a Spanish band, in which some of the performers were the Messrs. Winter, Wood, and Reed. A BIT OF FROTHY ITALIAN COMEDY

With Nazimova Charming as the Capricious "Comtesse Coquette."

PLAY BY ROBERTO BRACCO

Some Very Thin Ice in Playwright's First Work to be Seen in English.

Gino Riccardi.....Mr. Guy Standing
Comte Silvio Di Lorenzo....Mr. Arthur Forrest
Bianca.....Miss Marie Allen
Giuseppe.....Mr. Ernest A. Elton
Footman.....Mr. Rex Stovell and
Comtesse Nina Di Lorenzo.....Mme. Nazimova

If on a certain historlo occasion Eve had remarked to the serpent in the Garden of Eden, "Now here I am, ready and willing to be tempted—go ahead and do your worst," futurs generations would probably have been spared no end of trouble. That, in effect, is what happens in Roberto Bracco's play "Infidele," which Mms. Nazimova presented at the Bijou last night under the titls of "Comtesse Coquette."

Ths Comtesse is a certain very lovely Italian lady, whose husband adores her, and whom in turn she adores. But they have agreed that there must be perfect freedom of action, with no suspicione and no recriminations. The Comtesse flirts—or thinks she does—most outrageously, proceeding, as she explains, on the assumption that coquetry is a woman's surest safeguard against temptation. And she is intensely amused when one of her very particular friends, Gino Riccardi, assures her that she has really never pleced herself in any danger, but that if she will visit him in his apartments and still remain true to herself and the man who trusts her, there will be some reason for her claim of exceptional virtue.

She assures him she will give him svery opportunity, she tells her husband that she has an important engagement, the nature of which she refuses to reveal, and at the appointed time presents herself before her admirer.

This situation is led up to in several amusing scenes, one of which shows Riccardi engaged in preparing for the Comtesse's reception. He composes verses intended to impress her with the ardor of his passion; he arranges photographs of other women about the room for the purpose of arousing her jealousy. And upon the first intimation of her coming he seats himself at the piano and begins to play a soulful nocturne by Chopin.

Whereupon, instead of the Comtesse, her husband enters, and Riccardi is only able to get rid of him finally by inducing at a delicate affair he has on hand, and sending the husband to apologize for his, Riccardi's, failure to keep an appointment which he seys he has with the Comtesse at the skating rink.

When the lady arrives shs laughs at the labored poetic effort, inquires interestedly as to the history of the one man whose photograph is contained in Riccardi's collection, ignorcs those of the women, and makes her host appear utterly ridiculous. When word is brought that her husband is at the door she insists upon having him up, and that poor man imagines himself face to face with a terrible domeetic tragedy.

The final act shows how the Comteese wins back her husband's love and convinces him of her innocence, the curtain falling as Riccardi, the absurdity of his position finally borne in upon him, makes a stealthy exit from ths Comtseee's boudoir, while sounds of laughter come from the happy pair who ars in an adjoining room.

The play is bright and clsver in writing and construction, with several scenes of ingeniously contrived merriment. And Signor Bracco has been particularly happy in his revelation of the feminine moods of his alluring little Comteese. As he drawe her so Mme. Nazimova acts her, with a most engaging sxhibition of tantalizing capriciouenese, audecious sauciness, and just enough of a redeeming and underlying tenderness. It is a charming comedy performance.

Effective as the little piece is, it might be far more so if the roles of the two men were better cast. Mr. Standing seemed to have entirely missed the meaning of his role, and played Riccardi in something like a burlesque vein. Mr. Forrest undertook the role of the husband on short notice, which may account in part for his sluginess.

As Englished by Dirce St. Cyr and Grace Isabel Colbron, the play is somewhat toned down from the original Italian, but it still remains one of thoss very frothy concoctions of which one is inclined to say "harmless if not taken too often and in too large doses," and which one does not recommend to school girls.

MANHATTAN'S DOUBLE BILL.

Despite Bad Weather Big Audience Sees "I Pagliacci" and "Rusticana."

In spite of the bad weather last evening that most popular double bill, "I Pagliacci" and "Cavalleria Rusticana," filled the Manhattan Opera House. The performance commenced with Leoncavallo work, which was given with splendid dramatic force. Mr. Sammarco's voice was heard to great advantage in the prologue; Mme. Donalda seng her first act air with much purity of tone, and Mr. Bassi was called before the curtain many times and presented with a wreath after "Ride Pagliacco."

The refractory donkey, which upset a previous performance by sitting down on the stage, this time showed a decided inclination to climb into the mimic theatre used in the stage setting, and it took several chorus men to lead him away.

Emma Calv sang Santuzza in "Cavalleria," and Charles Dalmorès was the Turidu. Both of these artiste were at their best. Paul Sévelhac sang in both operas, and Mr. Campanini conducted.

NEW YORK TELEPHONE CO., 15 Dey Street

EX-PRIEST IN NEW CULT.

It's the Circle of Divine Ministry and Seeks the Higher Plane.

A small black-and-white sign in the front window of the first floor of the high-stoop brownstone house at 35 West Twentieth Street announces to those who care to read that inside ars the meeting rooms of the Circle of Divine Ministry. The object of the circle is to elevate humanity to that high plane where there will be no more worry and no more sickness. One of the pastors is the Rev. J. M. White, a former priest of the Roman Catholic Church and spiritual adviser of Thomas F. Ryan. The other spiritual leader is the Rev. W. Ellis Williams.

Mr. White is young, good-looking, and an enthusiast on the subject of the work of the Circle of Divine Ministry. He explained to a TIMES reporter yesterday some of the objects of the circle. In this he was essisted by Miss Anita Lawrence, who is the President and Chairman of the Executive Board. Miss Lawrence said that the circle had about 150 members and was not antagonistic to the churches.

"We teach the Divine Science, which is a higher branch than Christian Science," shs said. "We believe that all the laws operated by Christ are still operative now. As we come nearer the altitude of Christ we are able to use the same lawe. We believe that God's creation is perfect and that anything imperfect is the work of man. Ours is an effort to get back to first Christianity. Mr. Campbell in London has created a sensation by preaching re-stated Christianity. We have been at this work for ten years."

"Do you preach Divine Healing?" the reporter asked.

"Yes," replied Miss Lawrence. "We believe in healing by the calling forth of spiritual power. We can reach a plane where a man can overcome ths ills of life."

"Are Mr. White and Mr. Williams healers?"

"We are—I am a healer," said Mr. White. He explelnsd thnt no fee was rsceived, and that the healing was not obtalned by anointing or by the laying on of hande. It was brought about by the exercise of spiritual power.

"You must understand," put in Miss Lawrsnce, "that we do not denounce doctore and druggists. We believe that they do good to those who are on the low plane, whsre such things are needed. I myself, if I had pnsumonia, would get a doctor. We could not pray a limb on, and if a bone was broken we would heve a surgeon set it. But what we could do would be fo seek to life one to that high plane where spiritual power would prevent inflammation or blood poison."

"Who supports ths movement?" was asked.

"We are supported," said Mr. White, "by the offerings of our members. No, they are not all women. Some of them are business men—brokers—and the yarc well off. We have a branch in Orange, another in Brooklyn, and two in this city."

Mr. White also hastened to explain that when called in for healing he did not object to the patient being under the care of a physician. Indeed, the healer wes a sort of second aid to the sick, but the lifting to the high plane would soon make the services of a physician unnecesary.

On Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays at noon services are held by the Rev. Mr. White. There were fifteen women and one man present at yesterday's service. Ths women listened with rapt attention to Mr. White. The man was the first to go. The congregation sat with their backs to the front window while Mr. White occupied a seat at a small table placed between the folding doors. Between the two front windows was a long table on which were some pamphlets and books. Ths most conspicuous objects on ths table were two Social Registers.

The pastor sat at ths table while speaking. He talked in a rather low tone with his handkerchief in his hand. The last part of his nddress was devoted to setting forth the advantages of the atmosphere of the higher plans. He spoke of the banishment of sickness and care in this rarified height, and advised the women not even to allow other women to tell them their troubles.

"Don't listen," he said, "to the woman who would tell you of the sickness that carried off her husband."

He advised the cultivation of good thoughts as a means of "banishing the atems of distraction."

Following his talk Mr. White and his congregation spent three minutes in silent striving to reach the high plane. The women sat straight with closed eycs; the solitary man took the opportunity to leave ths room.

PSI UPSILON GIVES SPOONER AN OVATION

Senator Gets a Roaring Welcome at Dinner in Waldorf, Depew Sharing Honors.

SECRETARY TAFT CHEERED

Mr. Davies Renominates Roosevelt for the Presidency—An Evening of Lively Demonstrations.

The seventy-fourth annual banquet of the Psi Upsilon Fraternity, held in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria, last night, turned out to be an ovation in honor of ex-Senator John C. Spooner of Wisconsin, Senator Chauncey M. Depew of New York, and the Rev. Dr. Henry Bond Elliott, the latter being the oldest living member of the fraternity.

Senetor Depsw came in particularly for a series of demonstrations, all of ths speakers, with the single exception of Senator Spooner, having something laudatory to say relative to the New York Junior Senator's career as a statesmen, after-dinner speaker, and business man.

There were 480 members of the fraternity, old and young, at the dinner, and, according to the Waldorf-Astoria management, seldom has so demonstrative an assemblage gathered there as that of last night. The guests wanted to be cheering all the time, and when somebody was not speaking some section of the room was testing its lung powers with the rendition of the yell of this or thta university or college.

Ths Rev. Dr. Elliott was ths first of the speakers, and his talk wae in the main a bit of serious advice to his brothers relative to their life careers. After Dr. Elliott came Senator Spooner, who in the beginning of his speech declared that the occasion was one of the happiest of his life.

"This crowd," said he, "reminds me a great deal of the House of Representatives in Washington. I never felt as I do right now except when I was a member of that department of Congress. You know there is never any noise in the Senate, unless, as it sometimes happens, the mature Fairbanks gets into an argument with my friend Senator Tillman of South Carolina.

"You may not all know it, but for a year I was President of the Psi Upsilon Association of Washington, and as such the only successful thing that I did was to nominate our brother, Secretary Taft, for Prssident, and no sooner did I do it than Taft got up and with true brotherly consideration nominated me for the same position, but I had to decline the honor."

The mention of the name of the Secretary of War wa sthe occasion for one of the biggest demonstrations of the evening. The cheering lasted several minutes, and before it wae through every Psi U. present, judged by his actions, believed that the big Secretary was in truth destined to be the next President of the United States, although, as everybody must have known, Senator Spooner referred to the Presidency of the Psi Upsilon Association of Washington and not that of the United States.

Senator Depew received an unroarious welcoms. Old men waved napkins end clapped their hands, while the young men yelled thsmselves hoarse. Like Senator Spooner, he declared it was one of the happiest moments in hie long life, and never before, he added, had he been so proud that as a college boy he had been lucky enough to be chosen a member of Psi Upsilon.

In his speech Ssnator Depew declared that the resignation of Senator Spooner from the Senate "made a vacuum in that distinguished body that was larger than any made by death occurred in a quarter of a century." Hs defended the Greek letter fraternities in general, and the Psi Upsilon in particular, and dclared that the part they played a valuable part in the college ills of the United States.

"Nine-tenths of Americans are good fellows," said Senator Depew, "good fellowe clear through, and very few of them are fraude, and ssill fewer are liars."

Julien T. Davies, who followed Senator Depew, renominated President Roosevelt, and declared that the great mass of the American people wanted the President to run again.

He also paid his compliments to Senator Depew, declaring that the junior Senator from this State, with Senator Spooner, was one of the most brilliant men in American public life.

Isaac F. Russell, the next speaker, eulogized Depew in verse, one stanza of his offering being:

The friend of all men, without seeming to try,
Now he prays with the pious,
Now he drinks with the dryest,
Always bright as the daisy and as pure as the dew,
No fly ever lights on our Chauncey Depew.

Some of those present were Republican State Chairman Timothy L. Woodruff, John B. Stanchfield, John Kendrick Bangs, Herbert L. Bridgman, Judge W. H. Wadhams, C. S. Benedict, and the Rev. S. S. Travers.

Hs said that one day at Harvard ths President was escorting an old professor through the crowd, when his way was blocked by a big student. Roosevelt promptly knocked him down. A short time afterward Roosevelt attempted to move a small student out of his path. The latter resented his attentions and promptly knocked him down. "It was then," said Mr. Whitman, "that Roosevelt learned the lesson of hitting first."

RAIN PREVENTS BASEBALL GAMES

Boston Defeats Brooklyn, 1 to 0, in Only Contest Played in Both Leagues.

POLICE AT POLO GROUNDS

Pinkerton Detectives Will Be Employed to Preserve Order and Protect Players.

Only one game of baseball was played by clubs in either of the two major leagues yesterday, rain or the soggy condition of the grounds being the cause of the general postponements. The single game played was in Boston, where the Boston and Brooklyn teams met in a close and exciting 1 to 0 contest, the home club winning. It was not until the last moment that the local game between the Giants and the Quakers, scheduled to take place at the Polo Grounds, was declared off. Secretary Fred M. Knowles, who represented the New York club in the absence of Manager McGraw, who is ill at his home with an attack of grippe, and Manager "Billy" Murray of the Philadelphia Club watched the sky in vain hope that it would clear and rain would cease falling. Finally, however, they had to give up in despair and called the game off, fearing the effect on the players if an attempt was made to play. Despite the weather, however, there were between 200 and 300 dyed-in-the-wool fans inside the grounds in hope that a game would take place.

Secretary Knowles during the wait announced that the club officials had decided to put up a four-foot wire screen on top of the partitions in front of all the stands on the Polo Grounds for the protection of patrons. Mr. Knowles also said that a number of uniformed men from the Pinkerton Detective Agency had been employed to preserve order on the grounds during the remainder of the season. "We don't want any more scenes such as that of yesterday," said Mr. Knowles, "and we have taken the necessary precautions to prevent a recurrence of them.

Boston Wins Opening Game with Brooklyn by Score of 1 to 0.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., April 12.—Before a crowd approaching 10,000 in numbers, with many notables present as the guests and with a band playing, Boston and Brooklyn opened the National League season here to-day. A cold wind searched every corner of the grounds and the spectators shivered throughout the nine innings, yet the game was hotly enough contested to keep up a warmth of excitement throughout. Stricklett and "Cy" Young did the twirling for their respective teams, and the latter was in especially good form.

The only run was made at the outset, when, after the visiting team had been easily retired, Bates drew a base on balls and took second on Tenney's slow hit to Casey. He went to third on Beaumont's out. With two out, Howard stepped to the plate and drove a single over second base, scoring Bates.

Before the game the players of both teams marched out to the flagpole, headed by the band, and, to the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner," the Stars and Stripes were run up the pole, and the season of 1907 was on. The teams marched back together straight through the diamond and to their different benches, and a moment later the Boston players took the field. The score:

SCHOOL GIRLS PLAN GAMES.

To Give Public Demonstration at De Witt Clinton School on Monday.

The Girls' Branch of the Public Schools Athletic League plans to give a public demonstration on Monday afternoon at the De Witt Clinton School, at Tenth Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street, of the work that it is doing in the public schools. There will be demonstrations of folk dancing, which has proven the most popular and successful form of athletic exercise undertaken in the interests of the girls, and the various forms of athletics that are used. These include basket ball as played under the women's rules—which are quite different and distinct from the men's game—the new games that have been introduced since the offer of a prize for the best game suitable for play in the classroom, and similar forms of sport.

The folk-dancing, which has been under the charge of Miss Elizabeth Burchenal, has been singularly successful and attractive, and it is expected that its exhibition will prove especially graceful and pretty. Basket ball is to a degree well known in its salient characteristics. Of the new games, balloon ball has proved most attractive and interesting. The rules of the game as invented by Max Liebgold, winner of the Mrs. Henry Siegel Prize, have been distributed, and the game is being widely played.

The game is played with two toy balloons, one red and one blue, which are struck with the open hand only. The class is divided into two teams designated by the same colors, worn on the arms. The teams are assigned and take their places in alternate rows across the room from side to side. Four goals are formed by stretching a tape diagonally across the corners of the room, and the opposite goals are designated by colors, red and blue. The teams strive to strike the balloons and cause them to float behind the goals. Points are scored when the red balloon crosses the red goal and when the blue balloon crosses the blue, the red team seeking to protect the red goals and the blue team the blue. The game proceeds for a given length of time, with no cessation when the balloon scores, it being immediately put in play again.

The game is started by the teacher putting the balloons into play by tossing them up in the centre of the room. This is done at the beginning of each period and whenever the balloon crosses the goal line. The balloons are filled with a light gas of just sufficient amount to cause them to rise in response to a light blow, and gradually fall to a lower level within reach of the players. A score keeper keeps tally. The game is of fifteen minutes total duration, with three periods of five minutes each and two-minute intervening intervals of rest.

The fact that the game is designed to be played in a classroom where desks afford impediments to the players, there has been no need of specific rules to prevent roughness. It is planned that should the game be played with an open floor space there may be rules adopted later to obviate such difficulties and restrain the players within given areas.

The Girls' League also plans to hold an interscholastic city basket ball championship, and has adopted rules of eligibility to govern these and other future interscholastic contests that may be held from time to time. These regulations provide that:

The official women's rules will govern contests. All games shall be under the direction of an instructor, who shall represent the school in the High School Basket Ball Committee of the Girls' Branch. Each class entering will give its list of players, with two substitutes, signed by the principal, to the instructor in charge of the games, who will arrange the schedule. Officials for the games shall be members of the Basket Ball Committee.

No entry shall be accepted unless approved by the principal, and without a physician's certificate of physical fitness. No girl who plays basket ball outside of school, unless under the auspices of the Girls' Branch of the Public Schools Athletic League, or who has represented any outside organization or taken part in any interschool competitions, shall be eligible to compete in any event of this league until twenty school weeks have elapsed from the time of such competition. Girls taking part in any unsanctioned events render themselves liable to suspension.

FRESHMEN DID FINELY.

Youngsters Surprised Older Opponents.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 12.—The interclass track games at the Harvard Stadium to-day were slow in nearly all the events on account of the cold weather and the heavy condition of the track. No records were broken. The Frank D. Wells Cup for the best class showing was won by the juniors with 44 points. The freshmen had 28 points, the seniors 23, and the sophomores 22.

The freshmen furnished the greatest surprise of the meet when three of their men led the filed in the quarter-mile run, although all the fastest quarter-milers in the college were in the running. F. M. De Selding was first in this event, A. T. Norton second, and E. K. Merrihew third. The time was 52 4-5 seconds. The winners of the other events were as follows:

220-Yard Hurdle, Handicap.—C. M. Rand, '10, won. Time—0:26 1-5.
120-Yard Hurdle.—W. M. Rand won. Time—0:16 1-5.
100-Yard Dash.—P. C. Lockwood, '07, won. Time—0:10 2-5.

C. C. N. Y. Defeats Trinity.

Despite the drizzling rain yesterday afternoon, the College of the City of New York baseball team opened its home season by defeating the nine from Trinity College in an eleven-inning game by the score of 5 to 4. The City College team took the lead at an early stage, but Trinity, by bunching its hits in the eighth and ninth innings, tied the score.

In the eleventh Cordes of the College of the City of New York got his base on balls. Sippels bunted to Cook, who slipped and threw wild to first, Cordes reaching third. On the attempt to catch Sippels at second Cordes scored the winning run. The feature of the game was Wolfe's catch of Cook's bunt and his doubling up of a runner at first. Score by innings:

Trinity	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	2	1	0	0—4	5	4
C. C. N. Y.	0	0	3	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	1—5	6	8

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., April 12.—Cornell defeated the Onondaga Indians in the opening game of the lacrosse season here to-day by the score of 9 to 0. The Indians were outclassed and the play was in their territory throughout the contest. The Cornell attack, consisting of Lucker, Darling, Ricketson, and Odendhal proved irresistible and five goals were scored in the first half. The Itbacans made four more in the second.

Boxing Bouts at New Polo A. C.

The advertised boxing bouts at the new Polo Athletic Club were held last night. The club officials feared police interference after the action against the Long Acre Athletic Club, but as no money was accepted at the doors and only "members" admitted, there was no interference.

OXFORD IS VICTOR WITH TOP WEIGHT

Gray Horse Cleverly Captures the Second Benning Handicap.

RACE WAS HIS CARTER TRIAL

L'Amour and Mammymoo, at 30 to 1 Each, Were Winners at the Washington Track.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 12.—James McLaughlin's gray horse Oxford captured the last race at Benning to-day and won the right to be considered a formidable candidate for the Carter Handicap at Aqueduct on Monday. Oxford had up top weight, and he handled his impost well, forcing the pace from the start.

The fact that the track was not entirely to his liking makes Oxford's victory all the more creditable. He was favorite for the Second Benning Handicap, and a good price was obtainable about his chances, opening at 2 to 1 and receding to even money at post time. The start was good, and McLaughlin's entry, aided by a good ride from Miller, won easily.

Aside from Oxford's victory the day was featureless. There was the usual Friday card, with no events of importance. Favorites were not in good form, only two of them winning at short prices, the biggest upset of the day coming in the first race, which L'Amour won at odds of 30 to 1, while Mammymoo took the fifth with as good as 30 to 1 quoted. Serville, winner of the two-year-old race, was quoted at as good as 10 to 1.

The sport was interesting from a spectacular standpoint, three of the events providing stirring finishes. Summaries:

SIX SPEEDWAY MATINEES.

Events to be Held in Spring Under Road Drivers' Association Auspices.

Six matinées will be held this year by the Road Drivers' Association of New York on the Speedway, all of which will be decided in the Spring instead of dividing them between the Spring and Fall, as in former years. The racing season will begin the second week in June and continue until the middle of July. The remainder of the Summer and Fall seasons will be devoted to the New York Driving Club's matinées over the Empire City track.

Chairman A. L. Kerker of the Brush Committee has issued entry blanks for the competitions. Seven cups are donated and will be awarded, as follows:

The Miss Morosini Cup—To the trotter or pacer winning the greatest number of heats.

The Executive Cup—To the trotter winning the greatest number of heats that has not won a previous cup.

The Board of Directors' Cup—To the pacer winning the greatest number of heats that has not won a previous cup.

C. Floyd-Jones's Team Cup—To the trotting team winning the greatest number of heats.

The rest of the cups, which are donated by President Andrew Crawford, Ed J. La Place, and Charles S. Rice, are to go to point winners in rotation on the Empire plan.

No horse can win more than one cup, two horses constitute a brush, and none but active members are eligible to start.

Entries for the first matinee will close on Saturday, May 4.

Public School 77 Athletic Meet.

The third annual indoor meet of Public School 77 will be held at the Eighth Regiment Armory, Ninety-fourth Street and Park Avenue, on Saturday, April 20. Twenty-seven events have been arranged for the meeting, including several open competitions, which will be contested by Martin Sheridan, Harry L. Hillman, Lawson Robertson, Harvey Cohn, Paul Pilgrim, George Cameron, and other prominent A. A. U. athletes. The handicap in the mile race has been limited to fifty yards, which will insure the entry of the best long-distance men in the metropolitan district. The twenty-one closed events will bring together grown-up boys down to forty-pound midgets. The open events are: One-mile handicap, open to members of the A. A. U., limit 50 yards; putting 12-pound shot, handicap, A. A. U.; three-legged race and two-mile bicycle race, for members of the Military Athletic League, and 90-yard dash, novice, 80-pound class, and 150-yard dash, novice, 115-pound class, for members of the Public Schools Athletic League.

Valuable Colts Shipped.

Special to The New York Times.

LEXINGTON, Ky., April 12.—Two royally bred yearling trotting colts, the property of J. M. Johnson of Readville, Mass., were to-day shipped to their owner from here by W. W. Evans. They are a bay colt, by Todd, dam Amiss, dam of Phalia, 2:04, and a bay colt by Moko, dam Fanelia, the dam of the Futurnity winner Sadie Mac, 2:08¼, and the young stallion Todd.

Butterworth, Harrodsburg, Penn., and Irving K. Baxter, Utica, N. Y. E. C. Cowden shipped his great thoroughbred broodmare Set Nymph, by Requital, dam Longshore, by Longfellow, to the Brookdale Stud of H. P. Whitney, where she will bred to Hamburg.

FOREST KING TAKES CUP.

W. H. Moore's Champion Captures Leading Prize at Brooklyn Show.

In spite of the dismal weather, an attendance that filled the boxes and overflowed the galleries and aisles gathered at the arena of the Riding and Driving Club for the close of the Brooklyn Horse Show last night. For the crowd generally the big event was the contest for the Brooklyn Eagle Cup for gig horses, owners to drive. There was an entry list of eleven, representing the cream of the Brooklyn show, and, in fact, the pick of the great Eastern circuit of shows, but with the result foreshadowed by the victory of Forest King on the night before, the class failed to make even the pretense of a contest, owners of other horses giving up all hopes of victory and permitting Forest King to enjoy a walk-over for the cup.

Under the conditions of the class, the trophy, offered to be won twice by the same owner before becoming his property, went absolutely to Judge W. H. Moore, who simply paraded the great show ring horse for the cup last night, Forest King having won the competition last year. The victory added one more to the long list of trophies credited to Forest King, which has been shown continuously in the United States since 1900, when he was imported from England, where he also had a great career of successes in the show ring.

In the first class of the night, for harness pairs over fifteen hands and not exceeding fifteen hands two inches, a strahgely partisan element among the spectators met disappointment when Miss Emily H. Bedford, behind her smart pair, Hildred and Plymouth Champion, could only finish second to J. W. Harriman's Laughing Water and Chieftain, driven by the professional Jack Donnelly. The third pair were Mrs. Titus Blattes's Sporting Life and Sporting Times.

In the class for saddle horses, ridden by ladies, Mrs. John Gerken's Redwood took her second blue ribbon of the show, the prizes in this contest being divided between Mrs. Gerken, who was first and fourth with Redwood and Mazo, and J. W. Harriman's Avondale Stable second and third with Corinno and Petroleum.

Four of the ten pairs of harness horses, over 15 hands 2 inches; showed for the third class of the night, with two teams of the four representing the big show stable of Judge William H. Moore. The double entry fell short in the judges' decision, however, and the Moore entries, Delight and Delightful, and Senator and Burlington finished only third and fourth, J. W. Harriman's Avondale Farm pair, Lord Burleigh and Lord Brook, driven by Jack Donnelly, winning, with George Watson's Empress and Emperor second.

A champion from the Western shows, Castro, a black gelding, and winner in the Kentucky, Ohio, and Illinois shows, ridden by the Lexington saddle-horse expert, M. S. Cohen, carried off the blue ribbon in the class for the best-trained saddle horse. The Avondale Farm's Petroleum was second, and Perhaps third, while the spectators got a bit of fun out of an equine clown, a gray horse which was as unfitted for the class as imagination could go, but the judges, entering into the spirit of the thing, pretended to consider it seriously.

Two sales of show horses were made in the course of the evening. The Carr Brothers sold on private terms to the Elsinore Farm a roan pony, which is expected to be a big factor at the Summer and Fall shows, and H. C. McElwain sold the show horse Delmas to R. L. Patterson. Big prices were mentioned in both cases.

FOR LONDON HORSE SHOW.

Many American Exhibitors Will Send Entries for Olympic Event.

Entries for the first annual exhibition of the International Horse Show Association, which will take place at the Olympia, London, June 7 to 13, would indicate that the event will be a big success. The American invasion of the English horse show world, which began with the departure of Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's horses, will be continued during the next six weeks. The entry list will close on May 1, and the competition in all classes to open to the world. The prize list will aggregate nearly $40,000. In nearly all the classes for carriage horses the first prizes are to be $200 each, second prizes $100, and third prizes $50, while a few of the first will be $500 each.

To promote the interest of American breeders and exhibitors, a number of prominent horsemen will send entries from this country. In addition to Mr. Vanderbilt, E. T. Stotesbury will enter several trotters. Mrs. Francis Francis has already shipped two saddle horses. Alfred B. Maclay will send over several of the best horses in his stable. Armour & Co. of Chicago have booked quarters on the Atlantic Transport setamship Minneapolis for six gray eProcherons. The other prospective exbibitors are the Tichenor-Grand Company, George B. Huime, R. P. McGann, Clarence Moore, Edward C. Knierlem, George Pepper, John Gerken, and Mrs. William Stanton Elliott.

Besides the premiums, diplomas, and gold and silver medals will, at the discretion of the directors and appointed judges, be awarded to exhibitors for displays of or improvement in carriages, harness, saddlery, horse clothing, stable requirements, stabling and stable construction, veterinary instruments, food and medicines, shoeing and forge requirements, disinfectants and general exhibits.

The judges will be selected from the United States, England, and the Continent. Reginald W. Rives has been asked to be one of the three judges of harness horses, and former Park Commissioner George C. Clausen has accepted an invitation to be one of the two to judge saddle horses.

The Directors include the following well-known lovers of horses: Earl of Lonsdale, Sir Gilbert Greenhall, Bart., Arthur E. Evans, R. G. Heaten, John Kerr, H. H. Konig, Walter Lloyd and Walter Winans of England; Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, Clarence H. Mackay, E. T. Stotesberry, R. P. McGann, and Lawrence Jones of the United States. Sir H. Montague Allen, Adam Beck, M. P., and George W. Beardmore of Canada, and a number of prominent Europeans.

Automobile Notes of Interest.

Word was received yesterday at the American Automobile Association quarters in this city from Secretary Frederick Elliott that at a meeting of the Maryland motorists early this week in Baltimore it was resolved to form a State association. Three clubs have joined the body, and an application for membership in the National organization will be made at the Executive Committee meeting this month.

William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., has had several conferences this week with the Directors of the Long Island Motor Parkway, and plans are rapidly maturing for a public announcement of the route and the section to be used for the Vanderbilt Cup race. A general meeting of the Directors will be held next Tuesday, probably at the Lawyers' Club.

The Contest Committee of the Automobile Club of America will meet next week, when it is expected that definite arrangements will be made for the four to six days' endurance run. Rules are now being drawn up and they will provide for a strenuous test of touring cars.

Charles E. Duryea, who is considered one of the most expert gas engine men in America, and whose car won the first two automobile races in this country, has been made consulting engineer for the American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association, which now consists of forty-one automobile makers. Mr. Duryea began to make gas engines in 1886, and he started to make automobiles in 1891.

Although there is general regret that some automobile manufacturers are disinclined to encourage the A. A. A. tour for the Glidden trophy, it is worth noting that the American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association is in favor of the tour almost as a unit. Its members consider that the public is entitled to a demonstration of cars and their ability for long tours, and they believe that such affairs as the A. A. A. conducts are for the general good of the pastime and industry.

NEWPORT TENNIS WOMEN WIN TITLES

Mrs. Barger-Wallach and Miss Nora Iselin Score in Indoor Singles and Doubles.

PLAY BRILLIANT AT NETS

Inter-City Championship Produces Exciting Sport for Fashionable Gallery at St. Nicholas Rink.

Miss Nora Iselin and Mrs. Barger-Wallach ably upheld the supremacy of Newport tennis yesterday. As the team represented the Casino courts, they captured the titles in both the singles and doubles of the women's inter-city indoor lawn tennis championship on the courts of the St. Nicholas Rink, Sixty-sixth Street, near Columbus Avenue. This triumph was popular with the throng of society folk that assembled about the court and heartily applauded each splendid shot.

The singles title was won by Mrs. Barger-Wallach in the opening session of the day. She played a remarkable match, similar to those which carried her through the National championship last season on the court at Wissahickon Heights, Philadelphia, where she finished as runner-up to Miss Helen Homans. In this contest Miss Emily Scott, representing this city, opposed Mrs. Barger-Wallach, but, despite splendid racquet work in the final set, lost at 8—6 and 7—5.

Paired with Miss Nora Iselin, Mrs. Barger-Wallach won the doubles, defeating the Philadelphia pair, Miss Phyllis Green and Miss Marjory Green, by the score of 8—6, 6—4.

During the singles contest Mrs. Barger-Wallach displayed all of the pluck and courage which has helped her through many of her former matches. In the first set Miss Scott vainly attempted to outplay her opponent by rapid volleying at the net. Only the wonderfully placed drives of Mrs. Barger-Wallach caused her to successfully bring off this set after the games had twice touched at deuce, by a score of 8—6.

Mrs. Barger-Wallach won the first game of the second set on her service. But Miss Scott made a spurt and fairly romped away from her opponent in the next five games. Despite the score of five games to one against her, Mrs. Barger-Wallach never wavered in her steady returns of the ball, and finally the game resulted in a victory for Mrs. Barger-Wallach. The score was 7 to 6.

In the championship final of the doubles Miss Iselin again distinguished herself. Playing against the smashes of the Misses Green, she cut her cross-court shots off so sharply that the Philadelphia girls never had a fair chance at a return. Both sets were played at a lively pace, but the Newporters were much too swift for the Philadelphians, and won, although by close scores.

Six teams were drawn for the mixed doubles tournament, which will begin this afternoon. The list contains many famous players, and is as follows: Miss Jean Reid, daughter of Ambassador Whitelaw Reid, pairs with Theodore Roosevelt Pell; Miss Phyllis Green with Edgar W. Leonard; Miss Nora Iselin with Beals C. Wright, who is expected to arrive in this country to-day from England; Miss Marion Fenno with George L. Wrenn, Jr.; Miss Eleonora Sears with William A. Larned, and Mrs. Barger-Wallach with Raymond D. Little. The summary:

Women's Inter-City Championship Singles.—Final and Championship Round—Mrs. Barger-Wallach, Newport, defeated Miss Emily Scott, New York, 8—6, 7—5.
Women's Inter-City Championship Doubles.—Final and Championship Round—Mrs. Barger-Wallach and Miss Nora Iselin, Newport, defeated Miss Phyllis Green and Miss Marjory Green, Philadelphia, 8—6, 6—4.

EARTHQUAKE VICTIM LOST IN NEW YORK

Police Hunting for Walter C. Stevens, a Pacific Coast Lawyer.

POLICE HINT AT MURDER

Government Employe, Who Journeyed Here with Him, Says He Talked of Suicide.

H. P. Stevens, manager of a brokerage office at 1 East Forty-fourth Street, reported to Inspector McLaughlin at Police Headquarters last night that his brother, Walter Campbell Stevens, a native of this city, but up to the time of the San Francisco earthquake a lawyer, practicing in San Francisco, was missing. The case is a peculiar one, the police having letters, conflicting in their nature, which have to do with the return of the lawyer from San Francisco to this city, where, on his arrival ha disappeared.

The missing man is described by his brother as being 33 years of age, a bachelor, with a retiring disposition and a man of precise habits. He was described se being 5 feet 10 inches in height, weighing about 150 pounds, with brown hair, blue-gray eyes, firm-set mouth and chin.

For some months after the San Francisco disaster the lawyer lived at 1,395 O'Farrell Street, San Francisco. His health had become impaired following the earthquake. The lawyer had gone into the building where he had his offices to recover some papers on the morning of the earthquake, and while in the building a slight quake was felt, which dislodged a portion of the building in which Stevens was, and the man just missed being killed.

Then, according to H. P. Stevens, tha committee having charge of the relief funds gave Stevens a ticket for New York. Stevens saying he would go to liva with relatives in this city.

Stevens left San Francisco in company with a man described by tha police as P. Fechter of Middletown, Penn., a diver in the employ of the United States Government, who was also being sent East by the committee.

Tha police say Stevens and Fechter reached New York on March 3 last, at noon, and that directly thereafter 10 cents was paid on several valises and hand satchels Stevens brought East with him and which were checked over night at tha West Shore depot in Weehawken.

Under date of March 9, the police say, tha committee in San Francisco got a lengthy post card from Fechter from Middletown, Penn.. The card, the police say, read:

Red Cross Headquarters, San Francisco, Cal.:

Sir—I take the pleasure of writing you a few lines to let you koow that I got to New York all right with Stevens, but I had a hard time getting him away from the hospital and on the train, and then he talked about doing away with himself all the way, which was not very pleasant for me. His friend did not exchange that ticket. He left that for me to do, and he did not let his people know that he was coming. I will close with best regards.

P. FECHTER,

Middletown, Penn.

Fechter sent another communication to tha committee in San Francisco from Washington, D. C., under date of April 9. The letter, which conflicts with the post card, tha police say, reads:

I am in receipt of your letter regarding Stevens, and I am sorry to say he did not go home. I last saw him as we were at the West Shore depot at Forty-second Street. He was in good humor, and had been feeling fine all the trip, but on several occasions he said he was not going to his sisters, but was going to work for himself. He would not tell me his relatives' address, and his friend in San Francisco did not give me any information, except that he would be all right when he got to the city.

He had about $12 in money, two telescopes, one straw and one cloth, and also a small square dress suit case, which seemed full of books. I gave him his penknife and trunk check. We arrived in New York on Friday the 8th, about noon, as the train was late. He had on a dark single-breasted suit, lace shoes, black derby hat, white shirt, with white stand-up collar and black necktie, salt and pepper overcoat with brown velvet collar. He had not had a shave for two weeks and his hair was long. Hoping that you will hear from him. I remain,

P. FECHTER.
707 Seventh Street, S. E.,
Washington, D.C.

The relatives of the missing man in this city did not know he was coming on. Three weeks after tha day of Stevens's arrival a letter, which had been posted in New York, was received by the sister in this city, in which were inclosed several checks she had sent to her brother in San Francisco, and also the checks for his luggage in Weehawken.

The police would not say whether they leaned to tha suicide or murder theory in the case. The police said that the sister of the missing man is prostrated by her brother's disappearance, and they will not disclose her name. It is not known who paid the checking money at Weehawken, but tha luggage remains there.

ARREST THREE WIRE THIEVES.

Jersey Detectives Capture Much-Wanted Men In Tramps' Camp.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., April 12.—Detectives from this city and the Lehigh Valley Railroad's staff descended upon a tramps' camp near South Plainfield last night and captured three crooks, together with $1,000 worth of copper wira which had been stripped from poles along the Lehigh Road.

The prisoners have been identified as Arthur Gleason of Newark, wanted in that city for burglary and wire cutting; Henry Dorsoh, alias "Nigger," who has been songht by the police of Jersey City and Newark, and Giovanni Accellius, known beet in Philadelphia as an all around crook.

The men gave fictitious namea when locked up at headquarters, but readily admitted who they were when confronted to-day by detectives from Newark and Jersey City. The three have been connected with a gang that has been working for the last three months along the Lehigh from Jersey City to Bethlehem, Penn.

On various occasions the gang seriously crippled railroad service. They have also bothered the local telephone company. Twice last month they cut Plainfield off from communication with Newark and New Brunswick.

THIEVES IN THE TOURAINE.

Rob Two Apartments In a Well-Known Brooklyn House.

Thieves made a good haul in the Touraine apartment house, at 21 Clinton Street, Brooklyn, yesterday. Mrs. Daniel A. Rexford and Miss Emeline Buffington, who occupy apartmenta on the fifth floor, reported to the Adama Street police, that their suites had been opened some time in the late afternoon. In both cases thieves had forced the front hall doors.

Mrs. Rexford lost a jewel casa, in which was a small gold watch, an opal locket and chain, three diamond rings, a brooch set with a moonstone surrounded by twelve diamonds, a gold bracelet, a man's gold watch, a gold fleur de lia set with diamonds, and a diamond stick pin. This jewelry she valued at $1,800. Miss Buffington lost jewelry worth $100.

Detectives were put on the case. The elevator boy declared that he had seen no one go up the stairs while Mrs. Rexford and Miss Buffington were out.

Three Hurt In Street Car Crash.

A west-bound Twenty-third Street car last night crashed into another car which had stopped on the track ahead of it near Ninth Avenue, to avoid a passing fira truck. The rear platform of the first-west-bound car was totally demolished. Miss Mary McMister of 493 West Twenty-second Street recaved painful bruises. Benjamin B. Schaffer, a conductor on the Erie Railroad, was brulsed, and Miss Adaline M. Hoffman of Secaucus, N. J., was bruised about the arms.

LAWMAKERS AT IT ALL NIGHT.

Both Houses of the Jersey Legislature to Adjourn at 4 A. M. To-day.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, April 12.—This being the last day of tha legislativa session, with the House refusing to accept the Senata Railroad Commission bill, it adjourned without any legislation on the subject being enacted. The Democrats will make this matter a campaign issue next Fall. The two branches were in session late tonight, and it was expected that they would not adjourn until 4 A. M. Saturday.

In the closing hours of the House to-day Mr. Wright of Essex forced through his resolution to investigate the charges made in tha press about extravagance in State departments.

Mr. Barber, tha Republican leader, retorted that the Democrats were only endeavoring to make campaign capital. He defied them to find anything wrong with the Republican records for the past ten years. An amendment went through to investigate the expenses of the Legislature for the last three years. Five Assemblymen will conduct the investigation during the recess and will report when the Legislature reassembles, on June 18.

The Civil Service bill, fathered by Senator Colby, was killed in tha Housa to-day by the Democratic Assemblymen of his own county refusing to support it. The measure was lost by a vots of 40 to 15.

Among the bills passed in the House were the balance of the Senate insurance reform bills creating tha offica of State Directors of Insurance and for other reforms for the benefit of policy holders, and the Senate's joint reaolution providing for an amendment to the Federal Constitution for the election of United States Senatora by popular vote.

The House also passed tha Senate Car Demurrage bill, but defeated tha Initiative and Referendum bills introduced in the House at the instance of the People's Lobby, Democrats and Republicans alike declaring the proposition was too expensive and altogether impracticable. Another important measure considered was the Senate bill for a closed season for quail for three years. This was passed.

JEWEL THIEVES IN COURT.

Formal Complaint Against Rohrer and Green Sent Here from England.

With the arrival from London yesterday of the seal-bedecked bill of complaint from the London firm of Tiffany & Co. and others, the examination of Arthur Preston Green and Charles Rohrer, arrested as jewel thieves upon their arrival from London on the steamship Amerika about a fortnight ago, was commenced yesterday before United States Commissioner Shields. The Hon. C. Clive Bayley, the British Consul at this port, and Charles Fox, his counsel, were both present and watched with interest as the prisoners were brought in from the Tombs.

Rohrer, since his arrest, has shaved off his mustache. This change in his appearance added to the difficulty which arose when an effort was made to identify a picture which had been attached to the London complaint, and which, it was alleged, was Rohrer's. With the picture had come from Scotland Yard reproductions of thumb and finger prints, however, and these will he sufficient to prevent Rohrer's escape on a writ of habeas corpus.

Detective Sergeant Leeson, who was present at the arrest of the men, was placed on the witness stand. Lawyar Maurice Meyers, who is associated with Dan O'Reilly in the defense of the prisoners, compelled him to explain in detail just how the jewelry had been found on the persons of Green and Rohrer.

Meyers declared that while his clients might he held for smuggling, the charge of larceny would fall through as soon as his side of the case was presented. The examination was then adjourned until next Friday.

MAY NOT SANCTION RACES.

A. A. A. Believes All Such Motor Contests Should Be Absolutely Prohibited.

It will be difficult this year to discover an automobile track race meet, and if the American Automobile Association can do what many of its officers believe to be for the best interests of atoumobiling, not a single sanction will be granted this year by the National body. Up to the present no sanctions have been granted, but it is understood that the Racing Board, which acts upon these matters, has received a few applications, but their utility will be investigated very carefully before the official sanction is given.

Two and three years ago track meets were the great automobile feature. It seemed almost impossible to get enough of them. The decline in this branch of the sport has come about in a perfectly natural way, but it is also a fact that the numerous accidents that have marred motor car racing on mile tracks have exerted their effect in curtailing interest in such races. Beyond a limited amount of excitement, track races practically show nothing of real value in demonstrating the efficiency of particular types of cars. To be of any public interest, the events must be of from one to ten miles, and sprinta like this for a motor car teach nothing of importance toward the future development of the industry. The Long Island Motor Parkway will furnish a far more satisfactory method of testing cars in speed contests, and tha demand for a long-distance touring car race this year indicates most clearly the changed conditions in racing methods.

Track meets have never acquired any popularity abroad. The French drivers know nothing of them, and it was with the greatest reluctance that Thery and Callois, when the visited this country two years ago after Thery's victory of the Gordon Bennett race, consented to drive in a meet at the Empire City track. In tha immediata vicinity of New York, the Point Breeze track at Philadelphia is the only place where a meet may be held this season, but thus far the Quaker City Motor Club, which promoted two meets there last year, has made no effort to arrange a meet this year. The Point Breeze track last year cost the life of Ernest Keeler, who piloted the Oldsmobile car in the elimination trials for the Vanderbilt Cup race, and in view of that fatality it is doubtful if any races are held there this season.

The increasing popularity of touring and highway improvements are contributing their share in this reaction against track races, while at the same time they are directly influencing the holding of more endurance and economy runs, reliability contests and tests of other kinds for the imprnvement nf particular features of the car. More events of thia sort are being planned by clubs throughout the country this ycar than ever before. Hill climbing competitions ara also retaining their popularity and several New York cars will be entered in the hill-climbing contest in Philadelphia late in May, under the auspices of the Quaker City Motor Club and the one to be held by the Worcester Automobile Club in June near that city. The Automobile Club of America is planning a commercial vehicle test and an endurance run for the Spring season, the New Jersey Automobile Club will hold a three-day economy run on May 30, 31, and June 1, while the recently organized Harrisburg Automobile Club will hold a two-day endurance run through Pennsylvania on May 6 and 7. Similar events are also being arranged by a number of Western clubs.

NO QUARTER FOR BURGLARS.

Judge Rosalsky Announces He Will Give All Offenders the Limit.

Judge Rosalsky of General Sessions, who recently declared that he intended to make it hot for burglars who came before him after conviction, passed sentence yesterday on eight men who had been convicted of burglary. Three got off with light sentences on account of their youth. The other five got sentences ranging from four years and four months to nine years and fiva months.

"This is just the beginning of what men convicted of burglary in my court may expect," said Judge Rosalsky. "I have been told on good authority that thera are 10,000 crooks now oparating in New York, and they are becoming bolder every day. They entered my sleeping apartments only recently and got away with considerable loot, and about that time I learned of scores of other robberies.

"I declared that I would give the limit santence to every burglar brought before me, and I atarted in with the good work to-day. Hundreds of citizens about town have aent me word that they approve of my work, and I'm going right on with it.

"Many of the burglars nowadays are young Italians, the Tombs Prison being ovsrcrowded with them. Any who are convicted in this court of the crime of burglary as a second offense may expect to go to prison for life while I am on the bench."

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Prices Sag Further—Call Money Rates, 2@2½ Per Cent.

MONEY EASIER ABROAD

Indicated Gain of $3,500,000 in Cash This Week Conflicts with Well-Informed Banking Estimates.

With few exceptions yesterday's closing prices showed further declines. During much of the day the market was lifeless, the total transactions being the smallest in three weeks. During most of the session prices sagged, under light selling, and, while there was some recovery in the final hour, this was not sufficient in most instances to offset the previous losses. The day was devoid of any important developments to account for the further decline, but it was made clear that, notwithstanding the present ease in money, the demand for stocks is so limited that even such desultory selling as was in progress yesterday is sufficient to depress quotations. In its dullness the market here closely resembled those abroad, where there was shown little disposition to enter upon new commitments, despite the previous day's reduction in the Bank of England's discount rate. Impending loans of some magnitude and the selling of securities which had been temporarily tied up by the recent failures in London were assigned as the chief reasons for the sagging tendency in that market. There, as here, the absence of the public from the market remained one of the features of the trading, and one which lessened the interest in the narrow movements in prices, reflecting, for the most part, purely professional operations.

Freer borrowing on time at the lower level of rates established within the last few days was reflected yesterday in a slight hardening of the time money market, while the average rate for call loans, as was natural on Friday, when loans carried over until Monday, was slightly higher, being 2¼ per cent. yesterday, compared with 2 per cent. on Thursday. Rates remained low, however, in reference to any comparison that might be made with those that prevailed at the beginnig of the month, or even a week ago—at least so far as time loans are concerned. Abroad there was further relaxation in interest rates both in London and Berlin, although discounts hardened a trifle in Paris. The prospects for the immediate future of our own money market, so far as this may be determined by the preliminary estimates of the week's cash movements, were favorable, inasmuch as there was shown a probable gain of over $3,500,00 to be added to the very heavy gain recorded a week ago. There was some disposition in banking circles, however, to look to-day for a statement in marked contrast with the estimates of the week's currency movement. If a loss in cash instead of a gain should be coupled with a large increase in loans, as was anticipated in some quarters, yesterday's declining prices, in the light of such developments, would probably be regarded as having more reference to some impairment of the favorable monetary position than to any factors extraneous to the money market. The failure of the loans of the New York City banks to reflect in any adequate measure the liquidation which occurred in the stock market during recent weeks has been the subject of much interested comment in financial circles. If loans are again to advance, even in the absence of any general buying movement in the market, to about the level at which they stood before the recent severe decline occurred, some revision of the present money market outlook would appear to be called for.

ST. PAUL RUMOR DENIED.

Work on the Pacific Coast Extension Going Ahead, Says Sewall.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 12.—The report that the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad had stopped work on its Pacific Coast extension, circulated in Wall Street to-day, was denied emphatically by E. D. Sewall, President Earling's assistant, in the absence of Mr. Earling.

"The report is absolutely unfounded," said Mr. Sewall. "We are pushing our construction work as vigorously as possible all along the line, from the Missouri River to the coast. The work was suspended on Jan. 1 because of cold weather

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Although there have been some purchases of bonds by savings banks, the so-called institutional investment in high-grade securities appears to be dead. National banks are buying savings bank bonds for the purpose of obtaining public deposits, but real investment buying from that source is at a standstill. On the other hand, individuals are appearing as purchasers, and they show keen appreciation and good judgment of securities. This class of buying is welcomed by bond houses, and bonds thus sold are considered well placed. This buying is effective and stimulating. Trading in notes is distinct in that there is an element of speculation in the money so placed. It is merely a temporary investment.

***

Apparently the present market is going to continue its professional aspect indefinitely. There doesn't seem to be any sign of real public buying and the so-called big interests are not at all conspicuous. Yesterday's market was so clearly professional that a knowledge of the nature of the trading was scarcely necessary, as the tape revealed to the most casual observer the precise character of the buying and selling. The published list of buyers and sellers gives very little idea of the market, inasmuch as houses are used by professional traders, who are not supposed to be allied in any way with them. One of the drives at the market yesterday was ascribed to a certain operator of special prominence. But one of his intimate friends is authority for the statement that he is taking absolutely no position on the market and is not aggressively bearish.

***

Interest still centres in a few stocks, such as the Erie issues, Southern Railway issues, Reading, Amalgamated Copper, and Union Pacific. The Steel issues are always more or less active and the bars possibility of an increased dividend gives significance to any strength that may appear in these stocks. More than half the trading yesterday was in five stocks. This shows conclusively that interest in the market is not extensive. The preferred stocks of the Erie were under pressure from the opening, but the trading was very light. The weakness in these issues would seem to be more or less sentimental, and the bear gossip is apparently emphasized a trifle more than the occasion warrants. This, however, is all part of the game.

***

There has been a complete reversal in the commercial paper market from the point of view of geographic demand. A short time ago there was a heavy demand from the West for high grade paper, while New England was almost out of the market. Now the demand is principally from New England, or local, and the West is not a factor at all. Those who are hopeful that easy money has come to stay do not like particularly the change in banking conditions in the West. The balances of many Western banks here have been steadily decreasing. This may reflect Spring requirements possibly, but too many banks were extended, and they have had to replenish reserves. Local bankers, who feel that the ease in money may be superficial, say that they do not expect any developments of importance in the near future.

***

It would not be surprising if there were several reorganizations among brokerage houses in the financial district before the beginning of next month. Some of these houses are generally regarded as important from the point of view of their clientele. Gossip to this effect has been rather vague, but there is at least foundation for it in that such reorganization has been considered. Naturally on any such announcement the deduction would be made that it is a reflection of conditions begotten of market movements during the last month or so. This is not necessarily the fact, but it may be an influence.

***

Out of the speculative crash of last month came new figures in the trading world, and with its usual adaptability to new conditions the Street is ready to ascribe every important movement in prices to the activity of these new influences. One of the men widely heralded as the inspiration of the big break in March disclaimed all claim to these gratuitous laurels yesterday. "I am trading in one or two stocks on a small scale," he remarked, "and this talk about big commitments is foolish. When the opportunity offers I shall try again, but not for the present."

***

Only a few institutions in the financial district make it a rule not to charge more than 6 per cent. for call money, even when rates are very much higher than that in the general market. The brokerage houses which are able to obtain funds at these rates are lucky, as it helps their average rate for the month very much. These institutions are slow to reduce their 6 per cent. rate after the flurry is over, and very often the market for call funds has declined to 4½ per cent. before the rate to the broker in reduced to that figure. The wise broker carefully ignores the maintenance of the rate at 6 per cent. It is only the uninitiated or the foolish broker who pays off the loan when he finds that the market rate is below the rate charged by the bank that saw him through a 25 per cent. or 30 per cent. call money market with loans at 6 per cent. The bank does this to get some benefit from its own good nature in times of stress, but it carefully remembers the man who sees fit to pay off a loan because the rate is not promptly reduced the day after the stringency ends.

***

Sentiment is decidedly mixed with regard to the ultimate future of the market. Almost every brokerage office voices some kind of opinion or other for its customers, and these views, if collated, would show a radical variance with regard both to specific stocks and to the general trend of the market for the next two or three months. When it is recalled that the banking fraternity is equally at sea as to the exact situation, the lack of unanimity among brokers is not curious. Houses with Western connections seem to be very conservative, while in the least expected places, such as the old-time houses with no wire connections, there is a feeling of greater optimism. The element most in evidence, however, is one of uncertainty, and the expectation that is most general is for a very dull and dragging market.

***

Figuring to some extent in the cash changes of the week are the disbursements by the Sub-Treasury on account of transportation. These kind of bills are paid quarterly and they amount to a considerable sum in the aggregate. Pension payments help also to distribute Treasury funds to the public. Since the Aldrich bill became a law, however, these minor disbursements are lost sight of, because of the heavy deposits that are made with the banks.

***

One of the curiosities to be found in the trading in brokerage offices is the man with a grudge against a certain stock. This may result from bad luck in playing the stock at some time or other or it may reflect merely a feeling of antagonism based on nothing in particular. Brokers often advise clients on specific stocks, but in the case of a man who dislikes a stock, there is no chance of getting him to trade even though he knows that the information is excellent.

THE FOREIGN MARKETS.

Developments of Yesterday in London, Paris, and Berlin.

LONDON, April 12.—Money was obtainable at easy rates in the market to-day. Discounts were quiet.

There was a healthy undertone on the Stock Exchange, but the prospective new issues and the fact that some of the securities which were tied up by the recent failures were being marketed reduced the buying power to a minimum. Quotations in most departments had a sagging tendency. Mexican rails recovered sharply after yesterday's set-back on the dividend disappointment. Japaness Imperial 6s of 1904 closed at 101¼.

Copper shares declined in sympathy with the drop in the price of the metal.

Americans shared the general dullness. They opened below parity and gradually hardened during the session, but the New York opening caused weakness. Prices picked up later, and the market closed quietly steady.

The Indian Secretary purchased £125,000 in gold in the market to-day. It is due here May 4.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 11.25; Lisbon, 8.

Bullion amounting to £12,000 was taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day.

Bar silver firm at 30 5-16d per ounce.

Money, 2@2½ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 3¼@3⅜ per cent.; for three months' bills, 3⅝@3¾ per cent.

PARIS, April 12.—Prices on the Bourse to-day were very weak, and trading was inactive throughout. Rio Tintos declined strongly.

Russian imperial 4s closed at 74, and Russian bonds of 1904 at 491.

Three per cent. rentes, 94f 52½c for the account.

Exchange on London, 25f 24c for checks.

BERLIN, April 12.—Trading on the Boerse to-day was very quiet and prices had a weak tendency.

Exchange on London, 20 marks 49½ pfennigs for checks.

Discount rates: Short bills, 3½ per cent.; three months' bills, 4⅝ per cent.

RUBBER CO. MERGER PENDING.

Guggenheim-Ryan and U. S. Rubber Company Interests May Unite.

Rumors which have been current for a year of a possible consolidation of the Guggenheim-Ryan rubber interests, represented in the Continental Rubber Company, with the existing Para rubber monopoly, the United States Rubber Company, crystallized yesterday in a statement issued by President Colt telling of the appointment of committees of five by each interest to investigate the possibilities of coalition.

Both sets of investigators have been at work for some time, and that representing the United States Rubber Interests is said to have nearly completed its work. The second committee represents the Intercontinental Rubber Company, the holding company for the Continental Rubber Company, and the American Congo Company, which holds the American rights in the Congo concessions obtained last Summer from King Leopold of Belgium by Thomas F. Ryan and a foreign syndicate.

The Continental Rubber Company was organized to exploit the guayule shrub, a rubber-producing plant which grows on the waste lands of Mexico. The United States Rubber Company, on the other hand, obtains its raw material from the South American rubber plant.

An officer of the United States Rubber Company said yesterday that he could not say whether the investigations now under way would result in a merger or not.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 12.—Providence men closely identified with the rubber industry of the United States said to-day that they had been expecting that the two large rubber companies would be consolidated ever since it became known last Summer that Col. Samuel P. Colt of Bristol, President of the United States Rubber Company, had acquired extensive tracts of rubber lands in the Congo region.

CONDITION OF TRADE.

The leading commercial weeklies make the following comment on the general business situation, Dun's Review says:

Erratic weather makes trade reports irregular, retail sales of Spring wearing apparel being retarded by storms, and cold at many points. Temporary interruption to retail distribution has no ill-effects upon jobbing and wholesale business, however, heavy transactions and shipments testifying to confidence in the future, while mercantile collections show further improvement. Manufacturing returns are most satisfactory on the whole. Textile mills, machine shops, steel plants, and footwear factories have little idle machinery. Heavy selling of pig iron indicates the confidence of steel producers, material being ordered for delivery up to the end of the year. Railway congestion is being relieved, and gross earnings of railroads reporting for March were 7.1 per cent. larger than last year. Bank exchanges at New York were 4.8 per cent. smaller than in the same week last year, while at other leading cities there was a gain of 5.9 per cent.

Bradstreet's says:

Trade and manufacturing conditions are in high degree favorable, despite the lull in demand usual at this stage of the Spring season. The volume of business, as a whole, exceeds the corresponding period in other years. One proof of this is found in the liberal gains in gross railway earnings over 1906, 8 per cent. increase being shown for March, 4 per cent. for the first quarter, and 7 per cent. for the fiscal year, as compared with the best records of preceding years. Cold weather has likewise offered a check to crop germination, notably in the Central West and in the South, where the growth of vegetables and cotton has been retarded. Inasmuch, however, as the season as a whole is greatly in advance of a year ago, this check is not regarded seriously. More immediately hurtful, perhaps, are the reports of insect damage in the Southwest and of dry weather from Texas north to Nebraska, but impairment from the high degree of condition shown at the beginning of the month in Winter wheat is probably not very serious as yet. Specially notable features are the facts that many lines of business in the Southwest show increases in outputs and sales over a year ago of 5 to 15 per cent. The situation of money is toward further ease; shipments of currency to the interior are heavy, but collections are still backward, though they are said to have notably improved in the Northwest and in the Eastern dry goods trade. The labor situation, despite local disturbances, is very good, and wages in many lines have been advanced.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES

Trading in Nominal Volume, with Prices Fractionally Off at the Close.

MARKET LACKS INTEREST

Heaviness of Movement on Stock Exchange Is Reflected in Sluggish and Weak Curb Market.

Trading on the curb yesterday was as dull as during the period of midsummer lethargy, and notwithstanding the small volume of offerings, prices made general recessions in sympathy with the dejected sentiment on the big Exchange. Even Standard Oil, which during the week has made a rapid recovery from the weakness of a fortnight ago, sagged heavily yesterday, though the close was strong. The shares opened 4 points down, at 548, and dropped to 546. After transactions of 130 shares, the last price was 550, 2 points below Thursday's close.

Among the coppers losses were fractional, with no special feature in the trading. Butte Coalition was one of the most conspicuous among the declining coppers. Although the loss in this issue was only one-half point below the opening, it was 1½ below Thursday's close.

CITY'S PLANS CALL FOR $200,000,000

Big Corporate Stock Issues Needed for Improvements to be Made Before 1910.

LEWIS OFFERS NEW PLAN

City's Engineer Says Property Owners Who Benefit Should Help Pay for Street Extensions.

Chief Engineer Nelson P. Lewis, in compliance with a request mads by Mayor McClellan some time ago, submitted to the Board of Estimate at its meeting yesterday a list of the improvsments which the board has sanctioned or had knowledge of, and the cost of which is to be met practically before ths expiration of the Mayor's term. Thers are thirty-four improvements in the list, and the total cost aggregates $200,000,000. This must be provided for by issues of corporats stock before Jan. 1, 1910.

In his report accompanying the list, Mr. Lewis says that some of the figures have had to be approximated, and that in figuring on street openinga allowance has been made for authorized extensions of Delancey and Grand Streets and Flatbush Avsnue. He also makes ths following suggestion:

The city has recently followed an exceedingly liberal policy in assuming the greater part of the expense, and in some cases the entire cost, of improvements, such as the opening of new streets. The city has paid the bills and the abutting owners have reaped the immediate benefit. It is quite evident that if the improvements in the list herewith submitted are to be carried out a portion of the cost should be assessed wherever possible. Such a policy would seem to be especially applicable in the case of the acquisition of land for the proposed extension of Riverside Drive, for the widening of Second Avenue, or for the Plaza in front of the Manhattan terminal of the Blackwell's Island Bridge.

The list of improvements submitted is as follows:

1—Subway loop, Manhattan sec....	$5,000,000
2—Subway loop, Brooklyn section.	10,000,000
3—Rapid transit line, Manhattan and the Bronx.....	55,000,000

DISABLED ARAPAHOE HERE.

Clyde Liner, Which Lost Propeller Off Virginia Coast, Towed in.

The Clyds liner Arapahoe, which lost her propeller on Tuesday when off the Virginia coast while on her way from Jacksonville to this port, was towed in yesterday morning. Her 230 pasengers were landed none the worse for the accident. The shaft broke with a heavy crash about 10:30 P. M., when the vessel was off Winter Quarter Lightship.

The vessel soon got her wireless going and succeeded in communicating with her sister ship, the Apache, bound to Charleston, and the latter the next morning took the disabled vessel in tow. The hawser parted in the heavy sea, and that night both were forced to anchor off Fenwick Lightship, twelve miles from Winter Quarter Light. The next morning the steamer Iroquois of the same line came along and towed the disabled vessel, relieving the Apache, which continued on her way South.

The vessels proceeded until off Barnegat, where they met the tugs sent out from this city. The Iroquois at once let go her lines, and the tugs towed the Arapahoe into port.

The passengers of the Arapahoe said that there had never hsen any fear on board, and they were high in praise of the treatment they had received from Capt. Kemble.

TOOK A SAFE BY MISTAKE.

Driver Carts Off Express Strong Box Unhindered—Is Returned Later.

Special to The New York Times.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., April 12.—The United Statea Expresa Company reported to the Morristown police to-day the loss of a small iron safe, containing money and valuables, from the platform of the Morristown station of the Lackawanna Railroad. The safe was taken off a train yesterday and not miaaed until evening.

The safe was returned to the company this afternoon, its contents intact. W. W. Dean, a local electrician, sent his man with a wagon to the station yesterday for an "iron box," and the man, seeing the safe on the station platform, loaded it into his wagon and carted it to the shop.

When Mr. Dean discovered what manner of "iron hox" he had received hs promptly returned it, with apologies.

Just how anybody could help himself to a safe at the station without being stopped has not been explained.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Government Loses In Steel Strip Duty Case—Other Decisions.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals sustained yesterday the contention of the Crucible Steel Company, and many other importers, regarding the imposition of an additional duty on cold-rolled steel strips used in making car springs. It is held that the strips have not been polished sufficiently to bring them within this provision in the tariff for the extra duty.

The action of the appellate tribunal will probably have the effect of terminating a customs controversy of several years' standing. In an earlier litigation the Government, although uniformly unsuccessful before the Board of General Appraisers and courts, brought a new case. As a result of the latest decision, the Government will be under the necessity of paying out to importers large sums in the shape of additional duties now declared illegally collected.

In a decision by J. F. Fischer, the Board of United States General Appraisers sustained yesterday a claim filed by G. W. Sheldon & Co. of New York and Chicago, regarding the classification of articles made to imitate baskets of flowers, composed chiefly of lithographically printed paper, and in part of woven chip.

The merchandise was assessed for duty at 35 per cent. under the provision in the Dingley tar f for "paper." The importers contended that duty should he at the rate of 6 cents per pound as "lithographic prints."

CARRIERS' FRIEND KILLED.

He Was Only a Dog, but Many Will Be Sorry for His Death.

It was had enough for Hamburger, the special friend of "Bum," to hear yesterday that his dog friend was dead. Hamburger almost fainted, and as a fellow letter carrier grnbbed him by the arm to uphold him, every other man in Station Y of the Post Office Department at Sixty-seventh Street and Third Avenue turned aside, for poor Hamburger was sprinkling his gray uniform with tears.

"Where's his body?" asked Hamburger with a sob.

"God only knows—or perhaps the Health Department," replied another carrier who was beloved hy "Bum" next to Hamburger.

Three years ago "Bum" came limping through the Third Avenue crowds to the door of Station Y. He hadn't had anything to eat in many days, and the scars on his amiable face showed that he had been gnawed by stronger and beter-fed dogs. Having a strain of bull mingled with fox terrier, "Bum" had wagged along throuoeh his various battles without too great discouragement, but he was a young dog, and, scarred as ha was, he wanted a bone and a place to sleep.

"Hello, boy," said Hamburger that day three years ago, as he lugged his bag of mail into the office and heheld the half-starved pup.

"Bum" nearly wagged himself in half. It was the first kind word he'd received since the cruel first faced the world. There was a bad fresh gap in his right flank, and the blood was dripping from it. He had got the worst of the last battle because he had fought it on an empty stomach.

"Poor little fellow," said Hamburger, "You've had the life chewed out of you."

Hamhurger reached down and picked up the homeless animal. He carried him into the station and all the other men gathered about and declared that as battered as he was he had in him the makings of a dog.

He was christened "Bum." He got his second hold on life when he had his first square meal, and he began to try to repay the carriers of Station Y for the kindness they had shown him. He limped after Hamburger the next day, followed him over his entire route, and he wagged his battered tail every time his first and only master deigned to look down upon him.

When Hamburger reached an apartment house where there was no elevator he would give the letters to "Bum" and up the stairs he would trot, the flat dwellers meeting him at their doors, selecting their mail and sending him on to the next floor with many a kind word and many an affectionate pat on his rusty coat.

Carrier Hamburger had Madison and Lexington Avenues in his route. Here was where "Bum" mads friends. The choicest of the kitchen tidhits were saved for him by the cooks of the wealthy folks. He feasted daily on the bones of canvas back ducks, turkey, and fins steaks. One Madison Avenue maid always saved a fragment of a particular kind of pudding that "Bum" liked and "Bum" knew the pudding days.

Hamburger missed his faithful friend and companion on Saturday. He spent the better part of the late afternoon in paradlng over his route calling for his dog and whistling. But "Bum" did not answer.

Yesterday morning he came to the station, anxious and worried, hoping to find the dog asleep on his bed of mail hags. He was not there. Inatead, another carrier told him that "Bum" had been run over hy a car at Second Avenue and Enghty-first Street the night before and had been killed.

LONG ISLAND. FOR SALE OR TO LET.

$25 A LOT — BUY ACRES! BUY CHEAP! DO IT NOW! — $50 A LOT

Ask the Farmers and the Market Gardeners of Long Island

Is there any money in buying acres? They are all rich.

On Tuesday, April 9th, we saw the parting snowstorm of a long and severe winter. We are actually at the dawn of spring, and from this hour we will find sunshine and the splendor of the green fields, the earth upturned everywhere to receive the seeds which decorate the fertile fields of Long Island. 150,000 people this spring will enjoy the comforts and pleasures of Suburban Life, suburban to New York, who were occupants of Flats and Apartment Houses a year ago. The great activity in Real Estate during the year 1906 induced them to either buy or rent in the suburbs, and before another year a greater number will emigrate. Electric car lines are building in every direction on Long Island; Rapid Transit Trains are increased, and the great reading, wage-earning public are bound to get out and breathe the air and enjoy the sunlight where life looks sweeter and homes more happy. Every paper published in Greater New York has repeatedly stated in its columns, "Long Island is the one and only place to live. The best channel to place your money."

The Real Estate Transfer of Greater New York Last Year Was One Billion of Dollars.

THE INVESTMENT ON LONG ISLAND WAS $600,000,000.

$250,000,000 WAS MADE BY THE MARKET GARDENER ON LONG ISLAND.
WAS MADE BY THE REAL ESTATE OPERATOR ON LONG ISLAND.
WAS MADE BY THE SMALL INVESTOR ON LONG ISLAND.

You Knew of It. Did You Invest? You Just Simply Looked On.

BELIEVE US, DEAR READERS, TO-DAY WE ARE ACTUALLY AT THE BEGINNING.

350,000 people dropped into New York last year. An equal amount will be ushered in this year. Some of them building, buying or renting. It means New York Surburban Real Estate will improve from 20 to 50 per cent before April 1st, 1908. Have you a desire to make money? Make it quick?

LET US LEAD YOU INTO DAYLIGHT, INTO THE PROMISED LAND OF PROSPERITY.

We do not ask you $500 to $1,000 a lot, or $1,000 to $2,500 per acre, but will during this sale, show you one-half acre plots (10 city lots) at a sum less than you can buy a lot in the suburbs for.

$5 Down Monthly — $250 One-Half Acre (10 Lots) — $5 Down Monthly

Enough land to raise your own vegetables, raise your own chickens, keep a cow and a horse; if necessary; a spot large enough to receive all the pleasures nature can give. Buy the land on your terms and in a few years build to suit yourself.

Any Wage Earner Can Buy—Any Investor Can Purchase.

You are not giving up your life's earnings to pay for it. It is within your means and just what you want. Located in the most natural and fertile field of Long Island.

BAYSHORE

About one hour out by express trains now; electricity will make it 40 minutes in the near future; 6,000 people there enjoying the comforts and pleasure on the Great South Bay, where there is Rural Home life, splendid schools, churches, hotels and over 100 business houses; just far enough away to be strictly suburban to New York with many trains to and from the city.

Belle Terre Estates

Port Jefferson, Long Island

Five to 100 Acres Each

The Belle Terre Clubhouse in its every detail, from the quaint entrance with "coaching scene" wrought in the door to the great fireplaces in the hall, suggests the charm of an old English inn. An atmosphere of simplicity and quiet elegance pervades the entire place. The "hotel orchestra" is conspicuous by its absence. In its place entertainments of a highly artistic character will be provided at occasional intervals.

For those who are seeking rest amid surroundings of great natural beauty and a location of unequalled healthfulness, with such diversions as yachting, automobiling, golf, horseback riding, tennis—all free from the "crowd," with the added assurance of unquestionable social surroundings—the Belle Terre Club and the Belle Terre Estates have been designed.

The Clubhouse will be opened on June 15th. While intended especially for residents of the colony, reservations may be made by others who would like to make an experimental residence in this delightful place with a view to permanent affiliation with the colony. Rates $5 a day and up.

Booklet will be sent on application to

WANTS A NEW ELISOR.

Reuf's Prosecutor Also Moves for a Special Panel of Talesmen.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 12.—When the trial of Abraham Ruef for extortion was resumed to-day Special Prosecutor Johnson made the following motion:

"The People move that the court issue a special venire for such number of jurors as the court may deem essential for the purpose of completing the panel in this case. In this connection the people challenge the Sheriff and the Coroner of the City and County of San Francisco, on the ground that each of them is disqualified by bias, prejudice, and personal interest, and could not act fairly or impartially in this proceeding. We ask further for the appointment of an elisor to execute such orders as the court may make."

Mr. Johnson then filed half a dozen affidavits in support of his motion.

Lost—But Regained Through The New York Times.

To The New York Times:

I lost my amethyst breastpin and advertised its loss in two New York newspapers. The advertisements in the papers referred to were several days apart, probably a week. Receiving no reply to the advertisements, I gave up all hope of finding my pin, when I was told that THE NEW YORK TIMES was the best medium for advertising lost articles. I then inserted the advertisement in THE TIMES, and after two days the pin—an heirloom and very valuable—was returned to me by the young woman who had found it. I called her up immediately on receiving it and asked her where she had seen the advertisement, and she replied: "In THE NEW YORK TIMES."

BLACK HAND TRIES BOLD STREET RESCUE

A Dozen Italians Attack Federal Agents Taking Prisoners to Court.

INFORMER BADLY BEATEN

Assailants Driven Off After Fight and Prisoners, Including a Woman, Held for Trial.

While two Italian prisoners, one a woman and both charged with evading the revenue law, were being taken from the Tract Society Building, at Nassau and Spruce Street, to the Postoffice Building yesterday for arrignment before United States Commissioner Shields, a bold attempt was made to resoue the prisoners by a mob of a dozen Italians, said to be members of a "Black Hand" gang. The complaining witness in the case was set upon and badly beaten, deeplte the fact that there were three revenue officers in the party. The attempted rescue failed and the prisoners were finally landed in the Tombs.

Revenue Agents Loeb, McGuire, and Hibbard yesterday watched Girardo Spagnuello purchase two hundred or more cigars in the shop of Renaldo Della Vacchia, at 79 Mulberry Street. As the Italian came from the store he was arrested and the cigars were found to be unstamped. The agents took him back to the store and had him identify Renaldo Della Vacchia and the latter's wife, Rosa, both of whom were arrested. Spagnuello had previously stated that he had purchased 1,000 unstamped cigars at the same place last September, and the government agents were armed with a warrant for the arrest of the couple.

The prisoners were first taken to Chief United States Revenue Agent Sinsel's office, in the Tract Society Building. When the part started for the Post Office, McGuire escorted the woman, Loeb had Vacchia in charge, and Col. Hibbard walked with Spagnuello. At the door of the building the Government agents found half a dozen Italians, apparently waiting to accompany the party to the Commissioner's office.

At the corner of Beekman and Nassau Streets the party of Italians was joined by another crowd of the same size, and the whole moved up close to the officers, and then suddenly divided into three separate parties. One group went for McGuire and tried to release the woman, whom the officer had taken hold of as soon as he saw what was coming. The second group attempted the rescue of Vacchia, and the third went for Spagnuello. For a few minutes there was a lively time, the officers taking firm hold of their charges and endeavoring to hurry them across Park Row to the Federal Building, it being useless to make a stand against superior numbers.

Although there were hundreds of persons passing, only one or two offered assistance. With their aid the officers succeeded in holding the rescuers off and getting across Park Row to the rear door of the Federal Building on Mail Street. In the meanwhile, however, Spangnuello had been pretty badly pummeled by two Italians who were more than a match for the complaining witness and his escort. When the building was finally reached, the rescuers desisted and made off.

After the prisoners had been arraigned and held in $1,500 bail, which was not forthcoming, they were taken to the Tombs by Marshal Henkel and a force of his deputies. Spagnuello was escorted out of the building on the Broadway side. Fifteen minutes later he telephoned that he had been followed an dwas marooned in a bank at 72 Baxter Street. Mr. Sinsel and the deputies went there in a hurry, but a lookout had been kept by the Italian revenging party, and they all made off as soon as the officers appeared. Spagnuello was taken to a place of safety, where he will be cared for. His face and head were badly cut.

The assertion is made by the officers that the rescuing party was composed of members of the so-called "Black Hand" Society, many of the members of which are supposed to live in the neighborhood of Renaldo's shop. It is said, too, that Spagnuello knows the names of his assailants, but will not tell for fear of another beating, or perhaps worse.

BERT C. TESKEY A SUICIDE.

Brkoer Fled to Escape Family Troubles and Killed Himself in Toronto.

Special to The New York Times.

TORONTO, Ont., April 12.—Acting in response to an anonymous letter, Clerk McLaughlin of the Iroquois Hotel here, to-day identified as Bert C. Teskey, the man who committed suicide in a lodging house on March 23 by inhaling gas. Teskey had stopped at the Iroquois until the day before his suicide, and had registered as a broker from New York.

In part the letter which led to the identification read:

Judging from description of the corpse, I think it might be that of a man who was at the Iroquois Hotel on or about March 23, and whose real name was Bert C. Teskey, New York, and whose lawyers were Greenthal & Greenthal of that city. He stated at the hotel that he was wanted as a witness in the Thaw case, and had left the city rather than testify.

Persons who knew Teskey here believe that he may have been temporarily deranged ovr his troubl with his wife, who was suing him for absolute divorce. In a notebook which was found beside his body, Teskey had written:

Haunted by furies, I am chasing myself from place to place, and can find no rest anywhere.

It is known, too, that he wrote to his lawyers, saying:

I don't know what you want me to come back for. Don't tell anybody I am in Toronto. Why can't you fix this divorce thing up? Mum's the word. You know I love my wife. If I could leave booze alone she would come back to me. I am dreadfully worried. I cannot sleep or eat. I know in my heart she loves.

Teskey also left behind him a note in which he had written that he was suffering from an incurable illness, that his business was a failure, and that he feared to become dependent upon his friends. He asked forgiveness for his deed.

Benjamin F. Greenthal of the firm of Greenthal & Greenthal said last night that he had been retained by Teskey early in January to defend a suit for divorce brought by his wife. Teskey, Mr. Greenthal said, had been much worried over this suit, and, despite the lawyer's advice, had left the city in fear that his wife's attorneys meant to arrest him for alimony and counsel fees.

"He was a strange man," said Mr. Greenthal, "and I do not pretend to have understood him. I could do nothing with him."

Teskey had told him, said Mr. Greenthal, that he was wanted as a witness in the Thaw case, but this, the lawyer had thought, was largely imagination.

Assistant District Attorney Garvan laughed yesterday when a reported told him of Teskey's statement, and shook his head when he was asked if he had ever heard of him.

TO WORK POSTAL ECONOMIES.

Joint Inquiry Board Hopes to Establish New Methods in the Service.

The Joint Congressional Postal Commission appointed by act of Congress, after being in session at the Waldorf-Astoria for the last few days, finished yesterday afternoon its preliminary investigation and adjourned, subject to recall.

The members of the commission are Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania, Chairman; Congressman Jesse Overstreet of Indiana, Vice Chairman; Senator Carter of Montana, Senator Clay of Georgia, Congressman J. J. Gardiner of New Jersey, and Congressman John O. Moon of Tennessee.

The joint commission has engaged the services of two firms of expert chartered accountants of New York to make an examination into the methods of accounting and expenditure. The accountants have also been requested to recommend such improvements in the accounting methods of the department as they may find to be practicable.

The general view of the commission is favorable to the establishment of modern business methods in operating the business and keeping the accounts of the service. The present system was established in 1833, and in view of the great changes and the remarkable growth of the postal business since then it is believed that the commission will be able to recommend to Congress a revision of the postal laws to the great advantage of the public service.

The commission believes that the investigation will disclose that great economies can be affected by the application of modern methods.

A statement issued yesterday by Secretary Andrews said:

"It has been said that a contract could be entered into with responsible persons to conduct the Post Office Department and the Postal Service with the same efficiency as now in vogue for one-half the cost. The investigation now provided for will prove or disprove the correctness of the assertion."

JAILERS STRIKE FOR WITNESS FEES

Keepers in Paterson Prison Refuse to Sign Papers Unless Paid for It.

INSANE CASES HELD UP

Delegate from Strikers Tells Judge Keepers Want 50 Cents for Signing Commitment Papers.

PATERSON, N. J., April 12.—Not since "Speedy Bill" Miller escaped from the County Jail to get married has the jail community been so wrought up with excitement as it was to-day, when the keepers went on strike for witness fees.

Judge Scott was holding court, and business was at a standstill while he and County Counsel John W. Deyo waited in vain for two keepers to appear as witnesses and affix their signatures to papers committing several insane persons to Morris Plains.

The Judge and County Counsel waited for an hour, and another messenger was sent for the jail keepers. At last one of the men came into court.

"Your Honor," said the keeper, "we're sorry to keep you waiting, but the keepers held a meeting and decided to refuse to sign any more insane papers unless we get a witness fee of 50 cents."

Under the law, application for admittance to Morris Plains must be made by the County Counsel, before the Court of Common Pleas, and at least two witnesses must swear to the unsound mind of the patient. This is, of course, a matter of form, as the County Physician must first declare the patients to be of unsound mind before they are passed on by the court.

The law allows no fee for these witnesses' signatures, and heretofore it has been the practice to have the jail keepers sign as witnesses where the patient is from outlying parts of the county, to save the families of the insane any trouble or expense.

"What do you want fees for, when you are paid by the county?" Judge Scott asked.

"You won't blame us, I hope, your Honor, for trying to turn an honest penny. You know that experts are getting more than we ask for."

All the cases were laid over for a week.

Jersey City's Garbage Man in Trouble.

The horses and carts owned by James Padavane, who has the contract for removing Jersey City's ashes and garbage, were seized yesterday to satisfy a claim of Giardano & Co., at whose stables Padavano's outfit was kept. Henry Byrne, who had the contract last year, lent the city his horses and carts until Padavano's trouble can be settled. The city paid Byrne $58,500 last year. His bid for the current year was $57,200, but Padavano's was $39,900.

Dickinson Indorsed in Hudson.

At the annual meeting of the Hudson County Republican Committee last night resolutions were adopted approving the leadership of Col. Samuel D. Dickinson and, commending Gov. Stokes for reappointing him Secretary of State. The Secretary announced that many Fagan Republicans who resigned from the committee a short time ago had applied for reinstatement.

DICKINSON MAKES DENIAL.

Mayor Fagan's Letter Filed in Court in Libel Suit Against Him.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, April 12.—The declaration in the $100,000 suit for libel filed by Secretary of State Samuel D. Dickinson against Mayor Mark M. Fagan of Jersey City, to-day denies the allegations contained in the letter sent by Fagan to Gov. Stokes, and for the first time the declaration makes this famous letter public.

It was these charges that were investigated by the Governor, resulting in the renomination of Col. Dickinson. Mayor Fagan's letter begins with a formal protest against the reappointment of Col. Dickinson for the sake of "Public policy and party welfare." Then follow charges to the effect that Dickinson had used his official position to further the intereste of the Public Service Corporation and similar concerns, that he was on the pay roll of the former concern, that he broke with Mayor Fagan when the latter refused to stand for concessions to corporations, that he fought equal taxation of the railroads of the State, and that he endeavored to throttle all of the Fagan reform measures that were introduced in the Legislature. Then the Mayor makes the charge that the Colonel, by bad leadership, wrecked the party in Hudson County, endangering the success of the Republican State ticket next Fall.

Concerning the private life of Col. Dickinson, the letter concludes:

My information is that Col. Dickinsin hos for several years lived in a flat in New York City with a woman, and that he is now living with her at the corner of 122d Street and Seventh Avenue. If this woman is his wife his home is and has been for some time in New York, and it is a question whether he is a citizen of New Jersey at all. If she is not his wife, then, of course, you cannot appoint him to this office without insulting every right-living and right-minded man and woman in New Jersey.

Col. Dickinson declares that he will push his libel suit to the bitter end, being determined to obtain vindication from all of the charges made against him.

MOCK DUCK LOSES HA OI.

Child Goes to Children's Society and Will Be Called Helen Francis.

Ha Oi has changed her name to Helen Francis, and her home from 10 Doyers Street to the rooms of the Children's Society. Justice Zeller, in Children's Court yesterday, decided that Mock Duck and his wife, Tie Yan Duck, were not proper guardians for her, and that she was an American.

The child is 6 years old. She was taken from Mock Duck's home several weeks ago by an agent of the Gerry Society. Mock Duck declared that she was a niece of his wife and had Chinese blood. Her parents had died in San Francisco, he said.

Mock seemed very fond of the child and he and his wife wept when the decision was rendered yesterday.

His counsel, Louis Posner, had made a strong effort to show that Mock had taken excellent care of his charge. But when Justice Zeller asked Mock if it was not true that he had been twice indicted and tried for murder, both juries disagreeing, and that he was now under indictment and awaiting trial on a charge of bribery, he was forced to admit that this was so.

John Find, an importer, was a witness for the defense. The counsel asked him: "Is it not true that Mock's floor is so clean that you could eat off it?" Find indignantly declared that he "wouldn't eat from anybody's floor."

The crowd in the courtroom laughed when Posner asked Mock if he was not wealthy, and he uttered a mournful "No."

"His many arrests have impoverished him," explained his counsel.

SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS.

LITERARY SECTION OF THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1907. 16 PAGES.

SIR THOMAS MALLORY

By ARTHUR GUITERMAN.

WELL met, Sir Thomas! guide and comrade true
In many brave adventures. Slow, God wot,
Have dragged the years since last in Camelot
By Arthur's hall the bridle rein we drew.
Of Bedivere—of Bors what tidings new?
What gallant tale is told of Launcelot,
The courteous knight? Old friend, hast thou forgot
How rang the walls when round the table flew
That biting lay on Cornwall's coward King
Of hiithe Sir Dinadan? With snowy crest
And stainless shield, what young knight fares upon
The charmed road of high adventuring?
Alone, I ride a long and weary quest.
Oh, bid them wait for me in Avalon!

"REBECCA."

STRANGELY enough, these "New Chronicles of Rebecca," by Kate Douglas Wiggin, (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.) have been classified with civil war fiction, to which they belong about as much as the story of Cinderella or the voyages of Sindbad the Sailor. As a matter of fact, the very chapters wherein we might expect some reference to the civil war are singularly void of allusion thereto. The enthusiastic patriotism evoked by the flag-raising is not described as growing out of the strife between the States, but might as well belong to any period of our National history.

We all know Rebecca, though Mrs. Riggs modestly assumes that we do not, and very adroitly makes the new chronicles in a measure independent of the former sketch of this most delightful of girls. The episodes here narrated belong mostly to the earlier years of Rebecca's life in Riverborough, one to her student days in Wareham Seminary, while one takes up the tale where we reluctantly laid it down a few years ago, and is charmingly prophetic.

This volume is not quite up to the level of its predecessor, though it may be that a little of the piquant flavor of unique Rebeccaness is lost, simply because we have learned to expect her unexpectedness. Mr. Simpson, of engaging qualities and vague views of property rights, reappears, to the reader's joy, as do all the good Riverborough people, as real as they are quaint. Aunt Miranda lives up to herself in "A Tragedy in Millinery," and the "rich blacksmith's daughter" is as dear and as dull as ever.

As for Mr. Aladdin—well, we are sure Mrs. Riggs will not have the heart to withhold the Yet More Chronicles which will give that story. Of course we have long known it, but we want the details which only the creator of Rebecca can tell, and the charm which she alone can put into the telling.

Mrs. Riggs belongs to that small group of writers—all too small—who really add to the happiness of life. (By dint of sublime self-restraint we did not write "the gayety of nations.") When authors see with what touching gratitude we receive a little sunshine, even taking the impossible Mrs. Wiggs to our hearts, we wonder that the almost universal aim of fiction seems to be that of the Fat Boy in Pickwick, to make our "flesh creep." The conclusion seems inevitable, that tragedy is less difficult of achievement than cheerfulness.

However that may be, Mrs. Riggs has the blessed gift of dispensing smiles—though sometimes a tear lurks perilously ready to fall.

No better companion could a girl have than brave, generous, quick-witted Rebecca. Hers, too, is one of the beckoning hands that say, "Let us go back"—back to that highest wisdom which finds happiness in simple things, back to the conviction that to be pure in heart, loyal to duty, rich in love, are the true ideals of life.

What a noteworthy gallery of portraiture of American child life and girl life Mrs. Wiggin (as we all must still call her) already has to her credit! Polly Oliver, the delightful twins, Atlantic and Pacific Simonson, Iams Patsy, Carol, Timothy, Lady Gay, Abigail Flagg, Emma Jane Perkins, and Rebecca are only a few of them. In a little pamphlet about Mrs. Wiggin and her books we find this anecdote:

"You have many children," said a crystal gazer once to Mrs. Wiggin.

It was in County Meath, Ireland, at a fair held on the grounds of Lord Darnley, and the crystal gazer had been imported from Dublin for the occasion.

"I have no children," replied the author. "But I see them; they are coming, still coming. Oh, so many little ones; they are clinging to you; you are surrounded by them," went on the Dublin woman, her eyes on the ball; nor would she accept denial. "They are the children of a relative?" she asked hopefully. "No?—I cannot understand. I see them," she insisted.

Still questioning, still puzzled and frowning, she watched Mrs. Wiggin and her party as they withdrew, and it may almost be counted one of the minor tragedies of life that she never knew how truly her lips repeated what her eyes had seen in the crystal ball.

Kate Douglas Wiggin is a New England woman, and was educated at Abbott Academy, Andover, Mass. In California, where much of her youth was passed, she was conspicuously successful in kindergarten work. For a time she was director of the famous Silver Street Kindergartens in San Francisco.

KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN.

"A Bird's Christmas Carol," which immediately gave her fame as a writer, was published in 1888, and "The Story of Patsy" in 1889. "Timothy's Quest" followed in 1890. Then came "Cathedral Courtship," a travel book with a pretty love story, and the first of the "Penelope" books in 1893. "Polly Oliver's Problem" was published the same year. "Penelope's Progress" appeared in 1898 and "Penelope's Experiences in Ireland" in 1901. "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" was one of the most talked-of books of 1903. "Rose of the River" was published in 1905. This is far from a complete list of Mrs. Wiggin's books, and she has written much in collaboration with her sister, Miss Nora Archibald Smith.

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.

HE learned the sea's will and its mystic way,
And to the rhythm of its incoming waves
He set his measures. From its sea-girt caves
He took their glooms. Like its prismatic spray
His lines leaped sunward, radiant as the day,
With white-winged sea-birds, just above their crest.
And as strown sea-shells on the shingle rest,
The lavish wreckage of his rhymes shone gay.

In poesy's mystic scene some poets are
As far and changeful hill-lines; and some, near
As small, sweet flowers; and some, a distant star;
In some the rush of city streets you hear.
There is a name of tidal mystery
Wherein our spirits cry, "The sea! The sea!"

CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA.

First of the Fifteen Volumes of an Important New Book of Reference—Its Value Estimated by a Catholic Authority.*

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS by

The Rev. HENRY A. BRANN, D.D., LL.D.,

Rector of St. Agnes's (R. C.) Church.

THE new Catholic Encyclopedia may be considered as the latest and the most striking manifestation of the renaissance of Catholic literature in the English speaking world, and a proof that American Catholics are becoming, by their numbers, by their wealth, and by their education, the friendly rivals, if not the leaders, of their European brethren in the defense and in the propagation of their faith. After the English Reformation, begun by Henry VIII. in England, and continued by Elizabeth and by most of her successors up to the present century, the attempt to destroy the old church and to drive the Catholic religion out of Great Britain and Ireland had been persistent and partially successful. In the seventeenth century the English language and English literature became saturated with Protestantism. The Catholics, it is true, had their old books of defense and of explanation, written chiefly in Latin, which the plain people could not understand, and a few new books defending the old faith written in English that were flavored with the foreign idioms of exile, of Douai, of Paris, and of Salamanca. England, except for a small minority, became thoroughly converted to the new religion. The old traditions were gradually forgotten, and the English and the Scotch, who did not voluntarily forget them, were stimulated to do so by rewards or by fines, by imprisonment, and frequently by death. In Ireland the attempt of the English Government to destroy Catholicism partly failed from national antipathy and from the fact that the Irish did not understand English, for the use of the English language did not become general in Ireland until late in the seventeenth century. Into the American colonies the English reformed religion, with all its dislikes of the old Church, and with all the prejudices, many of them of purely political origin, against "popery," was imported with the early emigrants who settled on our shores. The later infusion into the colonies of poor emigrants from Ireland, just escaped from hardships and bondage, was not calculated to make their wealthier and better educated neighbors, who had even a racial antipathy to them, esteem a church and a creed represented chiefly by poverty and by ignorance, even though both were inculpable and even honorable, for they were the result of fidelity to faith and to fatherland.

A consequence of these conditions was widespread ignorance of the nature, the constitution, and the inner life of the doctrines, the practices, and of the ritual of the Catholic Church in the English-speaking world; so that many historians and scholars who should be above prejudice were infected for a time by the anti-Catholic sentiment. But at length they began to realize that a great church, which claimed Adam as her first member, and the whole of the Old and of the New Testament as her charter; a church that had played such a wonderful part in the development of civilization, of the arts, and of the sciences, and that assumed to be the sole authorized organ of the Eternal Word incarnate at Nazareth, and born at Bethlehem, deserved some courtesy and the careful study of serious minds and of sincere seekers after truth in history, in philosophy, and in theology.

The tide began to turn. In the beginning of the nineteenth century the courageous defense of English interests by Pope Pius VII. against Napoleon I. weakened prejudice against Rome. The Penal laws passed away in the British Empire. A reaction took place in the English Church and in English views of Rome. Oxford led the movement, the Catholics pushed it forward, and great minds like Wiseman, who preceded Newman and Manning; the Oratorians, many of whom were Catholic converts, and the Jesuits of Stonyhurst College, became the heralds of a second Spring, so that now, in England, Scotland, Ireland, and in the United States, some of the most learned scholars and of the most polished writers are the glory of the Catholic Church.

***

The new Catholic Encyclopedia is, therefore, a flower of the modern Catholic English renaissance.

*THE CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA. An International Work of Reference on the Constitution, Doctrine, Discipline, and History of the Catholic Church. In 16 vols. Vol. I. New York: Robert Appleton Company.

APRIL 1907

The volume before us has articles on Catholic and kindred subjects, from "Aachen" to the "Assize of Clarendon." It is well printed, as one should expect from the experienced publishers. It contains twenty-three full-page illustrations, three colored plates, and five maps. In looking over the names of the writers of articles we find that the great majority are natives or citizens of the United States. Great Britain and Ireland come next in number; but nearly all the nationalities are represented, as was to be looked for in the work of a church whose boundaries are not national, or racial, but universal. Thus Germany is represented by such men as Willmann of Salzburg, by Spahn, the leader of the Centre Party; by Erbard, and by Lins of Freiburg, and by the learned Jesuit Fischer; Spain by Hinojosa of Madrid, Belgium by Van der Essen of Louvain, the Orient by Oussani, a native of Bagdad; Italy by Buonaiuti of Rome, and Ireland by the Archbishop of Tuam, Dr. Healy. Future volumes will show a similar representation of writers of different races and of different nationalities; but the English-speaking element will always be in the majority.

There is nothing offensive in the book. The articles, as the preface tells us, are not controversial, but positive statements of facts and of teachings from the Catholic point of view.

The editors were chosen with consideration for their singular fitness for the work. The editor-in-chief is the most erudite Catholic layman in the United States, Charles G. Herbermann, LL. D., a man of wonderful memory and of sound judgment. New York claims him, for he has been the professor of Latin in our City College for over thirty years, although he is a German by birth. His associates are Drs. Shahan and Pace of the Catholic University, the former professor of history, the latter professor of philosophy, in that institution. Both are Roman Doctors of Divinity, and graduates of the American College of Rome, Italy, and both have already won fame as scholars. Dr. Cundé B. Pallen, the managing editor, from St. Louis, Mo., is a man of much ability and experience as a writer for reviews and for other periodicals. Then Fr. Wynne, S. J., the editor of The Messenger, represents in the editorial board the great teaching order of the Church, an order which has been for three hundred years in the van of every struggle for the preservation of classical culture, for the investigation of historical questions by appealing to original sources, and for the propagation of metaphysical and theological truth. His clear mind, well-trained intellect, and tireless zeal have been of invaluable benefit in preparing the work.

***

All of the important articles in the Encyclopedia are written by specialists who have established reputations as eminent scholars. Thus, the article on "Abraham" is from the learned pen of Prof. Howlett of Westminster Seminary, England. Although he is a Conservative, and a Benedictine monk, like the Abbot Gasquet, another contributor, one of the leading English historians and historical critics of the day, he lays impartially before the reader the speculations of modern scholars, Catholic and non-Catholic, on the father of the Jewish people. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is the motive of the writers. Traditions are not trusted, unless the original historical sources sustain them; theories are not accepted, unless they have passed through the ordeal of searching criticism and inexorable logic.

Other notable articles in this volume are the one on "Agnosticism" by Dr. Shanahan of the Catholic University at Washington, who has also lectured on scholastic philosophy in the University of Pennsylvania. His analysis of Spencer's philosophical theories is masterly, and, considering the limited space allowed him in an encyclopedia, is compact and almost complete. The article on "Absolution" by Dr. Hanna of Rochester Seminary will for the future save many a country curate the trouble of research in the Latin textbooks of his seminary days. All the information needed on the subject Dr. Hanna has clearly condensed into a few pages. The article on the "Apocrypha" by Dr. Reid, professor of Sacred Scripture and of Hebrew in St. Paul's Seminary, Minnesota, shows great erudition and a perfect mastery of this subject so much discussed by Scripture scholars.

Mgr. Loughlin of Philadelphia writes a critical article on "Alexander VI", "Borgia"; and gives a complete list of the best sources to consult in studying the life of this Pope, who was a great administrator, and who, in spite of his faults, would have taken rank among the ablest rulers of Europe if he had not been an ecclesiastic. The Abbot Gasquet of England also contributes articles that are models of impartiality and of careful research in the archives of history. "Anglicanism," by Canon Moyes of London, and "Anglican Orders," by Fr. Sydney Smith, S. J., are among the longest and best written in the volume. "The Arts," by Dr. Willmann, is a very interesting article. A perusal of the article on the "Archbishop," written by the scholarly Archbishop of Milwaukee, Dr. Messmer, will save many a newspaper from making the amusing mistakes of the past, when subdeacon and archbishop, amice, catafalque, cope, and mitre were often confounded in the busy and puzzled brain of the reporter who wrote the account of a Catholic ceremony. He can learn the whole of it when all the volumes of the new work are published.

"Aristotle," by Prof. Wm. Turner, the author of a well-known history of philosophy, is a good résumé of the teaching of the great Stagirite, the greatest of pagan Grecian geniuses, the guide of the scholastics, and, in some respects, the master of Thomas Aquinas in philosophy. The learned Jesuit, Joseph Fischer, professor of geography and history at Feldkirch, Austria, who rediscovered a few years ago the famous Waldseemuller map of 1507, which gave to the New World the name of America, has an article on Pre-Columbian America, in which he takes a rapid survey of all the supposed pre-Columbian discoveries of America. He makes a critical study of the Icelandic sagas, detailing the discovery of the Western Continent by Leif Ericson. The article is a model of scientific narrative and of unbiased discussion. The articles on South American history and Indian lore are by Mr. Adolf F. Bandelier of New York, a well-known authority on American archæology. In them he gives us his experience and his studies on the Indian aborigines of America, on the Spanish and English conquests of the Continent, and their immediate consequences.

Articles on the Ambrosian and Alexandrian liturgies, the former by Dr. Adrian Fortescue of England, and the latter by Henry Jenner, assistant librarian of the British Museum, London, and a very interesting article on "Alleluia," by Dr. O'Mahony of All Hallows College, Dublin, Ireland, will attract the reader who loves to study the early forms of Christian public worship. The article on "Acadia," by Fr. Campbell, S. J., is written by a master of good English style, as are the articles on canon law by Dr. Creagh, and on church history by Dr. Healy, both of the Catholic University of Washington.

If we pass from these articles to the smaller ones we find similar care and industry in their preparation. It required careful discrimination to pick out of the history of a world-wide church with twenty centuries of existence the names of those who deserved honorable mention in the new encyclopedia. The Bollandists had filled volumes with the lives of Catholic saints alone; Vacant, writing his "Dictionary of theology," from a French standpoint, had shown a predilection for eminent French, Italian, and Spanish books and authors; Welte and Wetzer's "Kirchenlexicon," a truly learned work, the composition of German scholars, had shown a natural bias for the great Catholic Teutons whose names illuminate the pages of modern history, and it was therefore to be expected that an encyclopedia written in English and by English-speaking writers would show a preference for saints and scholars and other great men of the Catholic English-speaking world. To name and write of all the great sons of the Church would require many encyclopedias, and would be an endless task. Hence arises one of the limitations of this new work. Probably in this volume the shortest article is written by John J. A'Becket, and it best illustrates our meaning. Mr. A'Becket writes: "Allison, William. He was one of the English priests who were victims of the plots of 1679-80, and died a prisoner in York Castle about this time." Another article by the same writer gives a sketch of Frances Allen, "the first woman of New England birth to become a nun."

Her father was the celebrated general, Ethan Allen. A good likeness of the lady at the age of 12 adds zest to her history. Also interesting is the sketch of the life of Dr. Henry James Anderson, formerly a professor of mathematics at Columbia College, and who, after his conversion to Catholicity, devoted himself to the service of charity and of science. Of him a distinguished Oxford scholar said that "he had never met a man of greater learning tempered with humility." It is proper that as the work is specially an American production, American men and women conspicuous in the Church should get special notice and a special niche in the hall of fame. For this, all honor to the writers; for the love of our own is the first law in the order of benevolence, of philanthropy, and of charity.

That the new encyclopedia has already been appreciated—that the mere effort to produce it has been approved by the highest non-Catholic authorities—is shown by the fact that our great and liberal American universities subscribed for it in advance. Thus did Harvard, Yale, Cornell, Princeton, Boston, New York, and San Francisco universities, and the New York State Library, the San Francisco Public Library, many of the Carnegie libraries, and scores of prominent non-Catholics and lovers of learning. Minor defects and shortcomings may be discovered in it by close inspection, but it will be generally admitted that the work is the best for themselves that English-speaking Catholics have yet published, and the most popular and the most interesting one they have ever presented to the non-Catholic world. REBECCA.

From "New Chronicles of Rebecca" by Kate Douglas Wiggin. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)

MR. CORBIN'S NOVEL.

A Story of Love Triumphant and Morality Brought Up to Date.

MR. JOHN CORBIN'S first novel, "The Cave Man," (Appleton,) is piquant, interesting and readable from first to last. Incidentally, it may be a trifle paradoxical in the fashion of the hour. Much it owes, too, to the atmosphere of Wall Street as it ascends, its solid essence sublimated to fine theories, in the uptown clubs where college men and literary persons do congregate and pass the time in sage conversation. In short, the book is a rarely perfect example of what may be achieved when an able critic turns novelist at second hand.

You may read "The Cave Man"—after getting a good running start—almost as eagerly and breathlessly as one reads the engaging detective fiction of Mr. Gordon Holmes, and forget (as Mr. Corbin himself forgets) in the mere narrative the underlying ironic scheme. For there is such a scheme. Similarly the amateurishness of the financial scaffolding of the plot may be forgotten, as one forgets the perfectly artificial crime plots which furnish Mr. Holmes with an excuse for his amusing ingenuities. One reads the story, that is, frankly as a story. One lets go the flying rings of fact and floats off into the land of fiction.

There is, perhaps, a bit too much Harvard in the dish, but that also hints of the essentially academic nature of the process by which Mr. Corbin has become a novelist. Harvardians, and even other college folk, will like it. And, after all, it is only the unfortunates with the bad habit of reading much good contemporary fiction (and remembering it) who will be troubled by the quality of crowded reminiscence in the story of Mr. Corbin's cave man. For such people the book will have its special interest on that very account. The others—the others who read what they like because they like it—will do as they always do. No mere man may guess whether they will take a story or leave it.

Whatever their verdict, this much is certain: Mr. Corbin has managed very cleverly—not quite so cleverly that what he has written may pass for a real story based on first-hand knowledge of life, but so cleverly that even people who know the difference, but who like his vein, may read him with pleasure. His cave-man is not the real cave-man, dug out of the heart of the man in the street where he lies buried and bound; he is a cave-man extracted from the writings of ethnologists, philosophers, and literary persons with (by a curious turn) the New England conscience superseded. Such as he is, he is quite good enough to serve his turn in another shaking up of the bits of glass in the kaleidoscope furnished by the life of New York City in the higher social and financial circles. From Mrs. Wharton you pass to Robert Chambers, from Chambers (with a touch of Tom Lawson) to John Corbin. The bits of glass are the same.

Specifically, Mr. Corbin's story concerns a great motor trust and a rivalry in love, with a pretty opening scene on Class Day in the yard at Harvard. The desired and desirable lady names one of the men (who is old fashioned enough to be honest) the "cave-man." The story, which has many really dramatic moments, shows how love modernized this "cave-man"—how he ceased, in the old-fashioned sense, to be honest and acquired the new higher or financial morality. Mr. Corbin suggests sardonically that it's all right—and perhaps it is.

"Fast-Furled" Not "Unfurled."

Miss Estelle Duclo's sonnet to Edwin Markham, in the Spring Book Number, has pleased many readers, and would doubtless have pleased them more if Miss Duclo had not been made to say, in the sixth line, that the "fell oppressors of mankind" leave the flag of freed humanity "unfurled." "Fast-Furled" is the way Miss Duclo meant to say they left that flag.

PROBLEMS OF RAILWAY RATE MAKING

Interesting Suggestions Drawn from Dr. Fisher's New Book Upon the Nature of Capital and Income—Political Economy Deduced from Double-Entry Bookkeeping.*

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS by

EDWARD A. BRADFORD.

THE "dreary science" has seldom received a breezier contribution, or one of more original treatment, than Dr. Fisher's discussion of the vexed concept of capital, which moreover has special timeliness in connection with President Roosevelt's campaign against railway overcapitalization, and scheme for valuation of capital values as basis for rate revision or the security of investors. The custom of previous political economists has been to evolve from their reason ideals of what should be, and to seek to impose their maxims upon the business world. There can be no objection, and a larger effect might have resulted if they could have agreed among themselves, or if their positions could have been demonstrated like a geometrical or even a logical proposition. Dr. Fisher abandons this plan in favor of examination of the methods of business men, and deducing economic principles from the practices which have withstood the severe test of profit and loss sheets. It is sublimated bookkeeping, to be sure, and Dr. Fisher teaches the bookkeepers quite as much as he borrows from their methods. Finally, Dr. Fisher adopts the methods of mathematics, and illustrates his views with diagrams and formulas. It requires a somewhat special taste to be enthusiastic regarding this portion of his book, but his method of bending double entry bookkeeping to the purposes of political economy is as effective as novel, and as instructive as entertaining.

***

Dr. Fisher defines capital as "a stock of wealth at an instant of time." He admits no distinctions between classes of wealth, or uses of wealth, men, land, raw materials, the clothes on your back, and food on your table, whether productive of income or unproductive, everything which a flashlight picture would disclose is capital. There is hardly a single definition of capital in any textbook which Dr. Fisher's concept does not quarrel with. Income is the service wealth renders. Thus a house is capital, and the shelter it affords, its service, is income, regardless of whether it is rented or is inhabited by its owner. Each item of wealth is productive of services and disservices. Thus, a house needs repairs, and causes outgo for them, just as certainly as it produces shelter, regardless of whether or not rent is collected. Dr. Fisher's text abounds with almost endless illustrations and frequent statements in account form of the practical working out of his view of capital and income. "When values are considered, the causal relation is not from capital to income, but from income to capital; not from present to future, but from future to present; in other words, the value of capital is the discounted value of the anticipated income. The fluctuations of this capital value will, chance aside, be equal and opposite to the deviations of "income" from "earnings," whereas, when the influence of chance is included, there will be in addition to these fluctuations still others which mirror the successive changes in the outlook for future income.

***

There are, then, both practical and theoretical objections to valuation of capital as a basis for declaring just rates on railways. The capital account of a railway is not a finality except as to the moment of time for which it is prepared. As to any other instant of time, it understates or overstates the truth, and is merely a bookkeeping term. The certificates of capital stock cannot be constantly altered to keep pace with the facts. Consequently it is customary for bookkeepers to maintain the book value of the "capital" equal to the face value of the certificates, but the company is meanwhile making or losing money. So the accounts include an entry first of surplus, and later of undivided profits, and the sum of all is the "capital." The market takes note of the additions, and the capital as originally issued has still another value depending upon earning power. The stock is worth its "capitalized earning power," and fluctuates with every change in it, from whatever cause. Besides the face value, there is then the market value, and the book value, and the physical value of the materials in the plant. The bookkeeper's value is least frequently altered, and he alters other entries more readily than the capital entry. The market's estimate is apt to be the more correct and alters often, but both are merely appraisals. The balance of an account in millions painfully worked out to the last cent may be very wide of the mark, and yet without the least intention to deceive and according to good practice. Of course stock may be issued below par, either with or without fraud. Thus there may be overcapitalization as well as undercapitalization, the latter being disclosed by high market prices. And any of these "capitals" relate only to an instant of time. In some degree they are antiquated and inaccurate the next instant after.

Now in all good faith it may be asked what basis is there here for making railway rates? In the first place, a railway's capital counts for but a small part of the cost of transportation. The expenses of operation consume two-thirds of income, to begin with. It would be unjust to allow the smaller element of cost to fix the rate. In the next place, if any railway's rates were to be fixed in relation to its capital it would be at a disadvantage with any rival carrier, whose rates fixed with relation to its own capital might be either above or below the first company's. Now it is well known that there cannot be two prices in any market, and it is just as true of the railway rate market as of any other. The lower rate would get all the business, and the higher rate would have to be altered or the company would be ruined. For example, when the West Shore Road was opened its rates were fixed with reference to the New York Central's rates, and not with reference to the capital of either road. Railway capital, like any other, is at the risk of the business, and the market must be met without references to the exigencies of capitalization.

Once more, according to Dr. Fisher's definition, "the value of capital is the discounted value of anticipated income." But it is proposed to make income depend upon capital; to derive rates from capital, although rates are the basis of the value of capital. This is like giving the answer to the conundrum and asking what the conundrum is. It is an argument from the conclusion to the premise. Finally, the essence of ratemaking is stability, just as the essence of capitalization is change. A thousand picked men could not value a leading railway's capital at an instant of time, and if they took weeks or months to the task it would be inaccurate as to the first part before the latter part was concluded. If the work were in some way accurately done it would be an unacceptable substitute for the present method of fixing rates upon an economic adjustment, with relation not merely to capital, but to every element of cost and competition entering into the production of transportation. A prodigious amount of effort and disturbance went to making the present rate law, which has produced no rates worth reckoning in comparison with the disturbing and depressing process of getting them. And now suddenly it is suggested that progress cannot be made without official valuation of capital, as though the income of a railway from rates were proportioned like interest upon a mortgage. No railway man who knows what ratemaking involves and no economist who agrees with Dr. Fisher in his concept of what capital is will assent to the proposition.

AN EIGHTEENTH CENTURY TALE.

FANSHAWE OF THE FIFTH. Being Memoirs of a Person of Quality. By Ashton Hilliers. Pp. 435. 12mo. Cloth. New York: McClure, Phillips & Co. $1.50.

THE luxuriance of English gardens, freshness of English lawns, sleek cattle browsing under old trees, friendly little rivers gliding beneath arching willows, drowsy cathedral towns, noisy military quarters, moors infested by highwaymen and smugglers, quaint inns like the Maypole, where we first met Barnaby Rudge, such is the background of a comfortable, leisurely tale of life and character in the latter part of the eighteenth century. Those who relish Besant's novels, with their quiet movement, gentle sentiment, and abundance of detail, will be apt to like "Fanshawe of the Fifth." The hero, who tells the story of his own life, is the younger son of a noble family. Not succeeding in the army, for which he was intended, he works his way to success through many hardships and perils. There is plenty of adventure. The plot is interesting and well sustained, and there are several characters drawn with dramatic insight. Having been earnestly and sympathetically warned against this book by an eager lover of fiction to whom it proved tedious, it was a particularly pleasant surprise to find that it had much quiet charm, and that it was written in a style of marked distinction.

AN APRIL GARDEN BOOK.

Mabel Cabot Sedgwick and Robert Cameron's Novel Work—A Retrospective Glance at Some of the Recent "Nature Books."*

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS by

MABEL OSGOOD WRIGHT,

Author of "The Garden of a Commuter's Wife."

FOR many years, or centuries, it is quite safe to say, the garden has had a literature all of its own. This literature has been as varied as the many viewpoints of its writers, the precise herbalists among whom Gerarde and Dodoens stand conspicuous. The essayist Bacon, the fantastic books of flower language and symbolism; "Flora Historica," the quaint volumes of Henry Phillips, and in our own day and generation the delightful books of Dean Hole, Robinson, Miss Jekyl, and others that combine accuracy of fact with rare charm of expression, all reflect the lights and shadows of a subject that seems to gain a firmer hold upon the human sympathies as time goes on.

Mabel Cabot Sedgwick has chosen the strictly practical rather than the poetic and literary side of her subject, and has produced with the aid of several notable assistants a painstaking, thoroughly classified, and descriptive list of "all desirable, hardy plants for the formal or wild garden," the plants being first grouped under the months from March to September, in which they come in bloom. In addition the species are subdivided according to their colors, and, as a lack of accurate color sense or definition is a quality that is universally noticeable, a carefully graded chart, showing sixty-three distinct shades, prefaces the volume. This chart is the distinctive feature of this book and may have been suggested by a similar chart, to be used as a guide to bird plumage, that first appeared a dozen years ago in Chapman's Handbook of Birds. Useful as the chart is and generally accurate in its shadings, it necessarily has its limitations, for it is impossible to give transparent flowers color-tone in opaque flat pigments, and proves that color sense cannot be grossly tabulated.

Take, for example, the last block on the chart marked Gentian Blue; it is a composite of a certain shade of the upper throat of the Fringed Gentian seen in a dull light, crossed by a sombre streak from the closed Gentian Andrewsii, but it does not represent the exquisite color of the Fringed Gentian, the great family exponent, and one not knowing the color would get no idea of its beauty from the chart. All of which goes to show that we must still educate our flower color sense by knowledge of the flower itself. A color chart may give a hint and suggest planting schemes to those who already know the flowers, but it can give no more real aid in composing the perfectly blended garden picture than an illustrated list of pigments would aid an artist to choose the color scheme for a landscape.

Another point forces itself when examining the book for its makeup and completeness. With the exception of a few climbers listed under vines, roses are left out, and it is difficult to imagine the hardy June garden as containing "all desirable plants" with never a rose at all! Of the many illustrations, some are carefully thought out in composition and technique, but many groups have been taken under too bright sunlight or with a lens insufficiently stopped down. The result being in turn blinding contrast or a flatness and distorted focus. The exquisite photographic work given by Country Life in America, and the various other outdoor periodicals, is educating the public taste to a high pitch and makes us very critical.

By and large, however, "The Garden Day by Day" is by far the best book of its particular kind that we have here. It is an intelligent and amplified catalogue of the plants described, and its painstaking sincerity and infinite care of detail should give it a place on the reference shelf of garden books. It is a good book to read when planning the technical detail of either a garden or a single flower bed for mechanical detail after having absorbed the necessary enthusiasm for producing beautiful combinations from such volumes as "Garden Color," the book of the four outdoor seasons produced a couple of years ago by Mrs. Earle, E. V. B., Rose Kingsley and Vicary Gibbs and sent to us from England.

CHARLES JOHN CORNISH, whose death a little over a year ago left a gap in the ranks of those who not only love and live with wild nature, but have the power to interpret its moods accurately and sympathetically, had contributed much of the result of his observations to The Spectator, Country Life, and other magazines. These papers, now for the first time gathered in book form, ("Animal Artisans and Other Studies,") present many interesting phases of animal life, particularly from what might be called the industrial side, the underlying current being the existence among other animals than man of distinct arts and crafts by which they either gain a mere living or provide themselves with shelter.

Particularly interesting are the chapters on "The Fauna of the Railroad," "How Animals Learn to Climb," "The Sense of Direction," and "Puppies and Fox Cubs," the author richly taking issue at the common custom of employing the words cub and puppy as terms of contempt when applied to the human species.

***

THE bird, as an individual, call it by whatever specific name its general make-up demands, is swiftly growing nearer and dearer to humanity, whether from the ethical sense that dwells chiefly upon its beauty and song, or the economic, that regards it as a killer of insect, and the special mediator between man and the growing crops of the world.

The bird of yesterday, as far as science and the closet naturalist was concerned, consisted of a lifeless, eyeless skin, kept from total collapse by a scanty stuffing of cotton, its claws fastened together by the string of the label bearing the dates of the time and place of its killing, sex, scientific name, and other details of so-called classification, and laid away in a shallow box amid its fellows. The bird of yesterday was the bird taken out of and away from nature, while the bird of to-day, even under the most approved and learned patronage, not only keeps to its natural haunts, but draws man there also. As a proof of this, see the series of wonderful groups representing the bird life of North America now at the American Museum of Natural History, New York.

Mr. C. W. Beebe, in "The Bird: Its Form and Functions," seeks to go beyond both the mazes of necessary classification, the interesting occupation of naming a bird by an opera glass study or the most satisfactory of all methods of memorising the bird's song, and observing its life habits, courtship, and nest building at close range, to a study of the bird itself, its function and its meaning in nature. To take up this side of bird study before one has become familiar with a score or more of living, flying, and singing birds would tend to concentrate and materialize one's point of view too much; but to those who have even a few feathered friends the volume will come as a revelation and a welcome interpretation of much that they may have observed, but to which they have attached no significance. Thus the author says:

> I have lectured to an audience of teachers, every one of whom was able to identify fifty birds or more, but not one among them knew the significance of the scales on a bird's foot. It is to bridge this gap that this book is intended—an untechnical study of the bird in the abstract. This, it seems to me, is the logical phase of bird life; * * * the study of the physical life of the bird itself preceding the consequent phase of the mental life, with its ever-varying outward expression.

The "Bird of Old," the first of his race, was but a plumsey, curious sort of specimen, as if nature was experimenting with fragments of animals close at hand to see what in them was worth perpetuating and what let lapse to extinction; which, by the way, is a simple statement in a nutshell of the evolution of types suited to the comprehension of any one able to read Mother Goose. One of the most interesting chapters in the present volume is upon this very matter, the seeming difficulty that nature had a couple of millions of years ago in modeling the first ancestor for the fourteen thousand or so species of birds that now inhabit the globe.

This first form was planned closely on the prevalent reptile model, with one exception—it had feathers, which were for all time to be the bird's first attribute, though it was to retain for all time the stamp of the reptilian link in the modified scales that sheathe its legs and feet, sometimes faintly, sometimes aggressively, but always there. Once opened, it is difficult to lay aside this book, so logically yet imperceptibly like the unfolding of a flower of the vegetable world does the narrative develop, the sequence being from effect to cause—the bird down to the egg, rather than from the egg to the fullness of life. The sequence of chapters runs thus: Ancestors, Feathers, The Framework of the Bird, The Skull, Organs of Nutrition, The Food of Birds, The Breath of a Bird, Muscles and Nerves, The Senses, Beaks and Bills, Heads and Necks, The Body of a Bird, Wings, Feet and Legs, Tails, The Eggs of Birds, The Bird in the Egg.

Side by side with a perfection of scientific detail, Mr. Beebe fans to a vital flame an exquisite appreciation of the ethical value of bird life.

***

THE contradictory title of a very readable book upon some unfamiliar member of the bird world of the Oriental quarter of the globe is "Bombay Ducks." For the singularity of his title the author makes explanation by saying that in the palmy days of the East India Company the European residents of the Western Presidency were known as Bombay Ducks, to distinguish them from Bengal Qui-his and Madras Mulls, but even in its fullness this qualification does not explain to our Western intelligence, which goes to prove the futility of apologies in general—where an ear-catching book title is concerned.

Without in any way questioning the ornithological value of Mr. Dewar's work, it is in the literary side of the volume, the facility of expression, easy narrative style, and genial satire, that the worth of the book lies. We do not particularly care whether it is the respectable simplicity of the life of a dove upon which he dwells, the Smith who told tales familiar to the readers of Kipling; the Spotted Owlet, the Paddy Bird, or the Bulbul of truly Indian flavor about which we read, and yet four chapters stand out from the others by virtue of their subtle handling, these being "Green Parrots," "Concerning Cats," "Cock-a-doodle-do," and "Cock Robin's Murderer."

Of green parrots Mr. Dewar writes: "Green parrots bear loving testimony to the truth of the Psalmist's complaints that the wicked flourish like the green bay tree. A more aggressively flourishing tribe of wicked birds it would be difficult to imagine. * * * Green parrots are strict vegetarians. I would earnestly commend this fact to those good people who attribute all sin in this world to the eating of meat. Further, green parrots are teetotalers. This should be borne in mind by those who declare that the origin of all crime is to be found in strong drink," and so on, the dissertation ending in the astonishing statement that "in America they have parrot schools, where for a few dollars Polly is given a complete education." This of the native Indian house sparrow. No bird, except possibly the Indian crow, has been the object of so much vilification as the sparrow."

The English home sparrow has a world-wide reputation for pugilistic impudence, but the writer avers, according to Lockwood Kipling, when compared to their Indian brethren their manners are marked by dignity and cold reserve.

In his chapter upon the brawling kingfisher of generally gray and blue plumage Dewar drops ornithology for journalese in his dissertation of the errors made by poets in their descriptions of even the most familiar birds. Howitt, it seems, referred to the scarlet plume of the halcyon, (the poetic name for the kingfisher.) "But Shelley beats all records, no Yankee bloodcurdling yarn-spinner could equal him."

> Upon a drooping bough with nightshade twined,
> I saw two azure halcyons clinging downward,
> And thinning a bright branch of amber berries
> With quick, long beaks, and in the deep there lay
> Those lovely forms, imaged, as in a sky.

"Had he described a couple of kingfishers sitting on a merry-go-round, drinking ginger pop and eating apple tarts, the poet would have been equally near the truth. The worst evil one can wish to a bird is for it to fall into the clutches of the poet.

"Of course this lapse in identification by the poet served to point a moral and provoke a laugh, but has he belittled the skylark or raised it if possible one circle further skyward? It is in little points like these that a certain superficiality of the author is manifest no less than his summary dismissal of the firmly founded claims of protective coloration.

His sketch of the domestic fowl is very amusing. This poor bird has evidently been more degenerated by its Indian sojourn than even the sparrow, for the native violates the natural law against inbreeding, and a miserable, undersized race of cattle, horses, pigeons, and other fowl is the result.

***

IN Douglas English's "Wee, Tim'rous Beasties" we have a volume wherein knowledge and love of the nearby in nature are so well blended that the book that contains the tale of it all will, after the first eager reading, lie a long time upon the table close to the elbow before it is placed on the remoter shelf. Without any effort at effect the writer describes the doings of the "wee beasties" in whose lives he has seemingly had a part so vividly that we not only see them, but catch their viewpoint and breathe their very atmosphere. That all these lives, simple, even commonplace, to those who do not know them, are fraught with a significance that we cannot afford to overlook, especially in their relation to ourselves, is amply illustrated by the life story of Mus Ridiculus, as the vole called the field mouse, the vole in its turn contributing a chapter.

"The Apology of the House Sparrow" is so plausible that we give a sigh of regret that in this country we must be hostile to it in order to protect our song birds from its persecutions and our ears from its ceaseless clamor as well. While "The Passing of the Black Rat" is quite worthy a place among animal stories of the virile Kipling type.

MEMORIES. By Major Gen. Sir Owen Tudor Burne. Illustrated. Pp., ix.-343. 8vo, cloth. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. $4.20.

THERE are few more attractive books than those autobiographical volumes in which so many Englishmen toward the close of life become pleasantly reminiscent. These recollections of an old soldier, who was in the Crimea and was present at the capture of Lucknow, when he was a Lieutenant in the twenties, are a welcome addition to the numerous works of the same nature which form so important a part of our modern literature. Sir Owen Burne's story of his long career of active service in military and civil life is distinguished by frankness, cheery good nature, shrewd perception of character, and a large-minded charity which enables him to recognize the merits of his political opponents. A man can scarcely have had so long and varied an experience of public life without meeting rebuffs, enduring disappointments, incurring enmities; yet there are no bitter comments or complaints, and if the kindly veteran is harboring any grudges, that fact does not appear in his genial pages.

The recollections of the late Queen Victoria are of a quite intimate character, and only confirm the impression of her sterling qualities received from many other sources. There are several agreeable instances of her superiority to trivial conventionalities. The descriptions of imposing national functions, such as the Queen's Jubilees of 1887 and 1897, and the coronation of the present King have an interest rather unusual in such accounts. There is a charming description of Tennyson, as seen under the most favorable circumstances, which is too long for quotation, and which we will not mar by curtailment. The pithy anecdotes, scattered here and there, would in themselves make a pleasant article for after-dinner reading. Extracts from the diary kept by the Shah of Persia during his visit to Russia, Germany, and England in 1873 make entertaining reading. This diary was sent to Sir Owen after the Shah's death, and he hopes that in quoting from it he is not transgressing the laws of the Medes and Persians. Concerning the climate of certain districts of India a saying of the inhabitants is quoted: "O Creator of the Universe, when You made Sibo why need You have made hell!" Interesting illustrations and a good index materially enhance the value of the book. The ways of some of the high Indian dignitaries are thus described:

> Speaking of the Khan of Kheiat and his followers, they were very much alarmed when put into the first railway train they had ever seen. They had all the carriage doors securely locked, and held on to the seats like grim death, expecting that every moment would be their end. They were no sooner lodged in their sumptuous camp than they ate up for supper the whole of the cakes of Pears's soap which we ventured to supply them for long-neglected ablutions, in addition to which they kicked out of their tents our fine bedsteads and used our jugs and basins for eating and drinking purposes!

SUMMARY OF LITERATURE.

A VALUABLE literary reference work will come from the press of Messrs. E. P. Dutton & Co. next week. It is "A Summary of the Literature of Modern Europe, (England, France, Italy, Spain,) from the Origins to 1400," compiled and arranged by Marion Edwards. The book is an 8vo, Pp. 532; price $2.50. The long title describes this bibliographical résumé of the works of the writers of the centuries mentioned. It promises to be a more than satisfactory reference book because of its thorough review of every work and writer that should be mentioned. The individual subjects, however, are tersely set forth. The chapters on the countries are divided by centuries, with sub-classifications for the periods of literature and kinds of writers. A clear running table of contents to classifications of works, as well as to individual names, serves as a guide. There are short historical interpolations in the text not noted in the index.

"The Changed Cross."

A remarkable success in what is to some doubtless an unexpected quarter is that of "The Changed Cross," a volume of religious and devotional verse originally compiled and published by the late A. D. F. Randolph, with some of his verses and many that are anonymous. Two hundred and fifty thousand copies of it have been sold. The book is now published by Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons. It is said, in semi-explanation of this book's reception, that, despite the Wesleys, Watts, Keble, and others, "good English religious lyrics are scarce as hen's teeth."

BOOKS FOR BOYS.

Mr. Henderson's Quaint Sea Yarns—"The Parson's Boys"—"A Boy's Vacation Abroad."

W. J. HENDERSON has written a book for boys that must have given him almost as much pleasure in the composing as it will undoubtedly give numerous youngsters in the reading. The little volume of 200 pages is entitled "Sea Yarns for Boys, Spun by an Old Salt." (New York: Harper & Brothers, 60 cents). The remarkable quality of this ostensibly "boy's book" is that the boys, if they are the right sort, will never grow too old to read it; for wise men never permit themselves to reach the petrified stage of development when they have forgotten how to enjoy a good yarn well told.

The nineteen stories are narrated in quaint dialect and in a kind of Uncle Remus guise. Two boys are the listeners, and an old sea dog who has long parted company with his last vestige of veracity, is the raconteur. They are "whoppers" of the thirty-third degree thrice magnified. They are all told with the utmost ingenuousness and seriousness, and some of them would do credit to a second Munchausen. They deal with impossible adventures aboard impossible vessels, in impossible seas or on impossible islands. One can almost see the humorous glint in the old sailor's eye as he adds absurdity to absurdity, clothing all in a semblance of reality, and trying to figure out just how much of it the youngsters are really swallowing. The tales are genuine flights of an imagination that stops at nothing. Moreover, they are adorned with many bits of laughable reflection and wisecare philosophy of the weatherbeaten brand.

Among other delightful and incredible things we learn of a good ship that got caught in the vortex of a cyclone and whirled round and round for several days without pausing for breath; of two racing yachts that started out to round a certain lightship which broke loose, with the result that they had to chase it across the Atlantic and back to get the trophies; of a mysterious blockade runner that was really pulled by a tame shark; of a man who had a house on top of an iceberg, and many other little oddities of a similar nature. In one instance the intrepid sailorman dines with a merman, who is a most unconventional and singular person; in another he is carried on the back of a tame seal to the home of a man who has found the North Pole and is guarding it; in another a monkey becomes Captain of the vessel, and in yet another he meets a race of "dude pirates" who wear frock coats and would never, never think of such a thing as really killing a man.

This book is seriously recommended to all youngsters—and to all of the older boys who have a spare moment in which they would rather regale themselves with a few of these extraordinary yarns than tire themselves further by reading more pretentious works.

"The Parson's Boys," by Robert Casey, with numerous illustrations (The Parson's Boys Publishing Company, Denver, Col.,) is a more typical boy's book, but a very readable one of its kind. It is a volume of nearly 400 pages printed in large type and otherwise adapted to the needs of young readers.

Besides containing an ample supply of the pranks and adventures on which the popularity of such a book is bound to depend, the continued story has some considerable character interest. The parson is a Methodist clergyman, continually moved from district to district, and the time is about the period of the civil war. The parson has firm faith in the old doctrine of spare the rod and spoil the child; and carries it to an almost savage extreme. In fact, in spite of his religious calling, he is the tyrant and terror of his family. A morose and semi-fanatical person by nature, the events of the great civil strife further accentuate his acridity.

The boys are little fellows of 9 and 11. The three girls are older, and the crisis in the family comes when the father undertakes to chastise one of these daughters. Ruth, a girl of 17, for a chance slighting speech. In the end the parson, through his bitter preaching against slavery, becomes a special object of hatred for the Confederate faction of the border land. A band of particularly ruthless guerrillas attempt to murder him, and in an exciting chase he is warned and saved by the two little sons whom he has so badly treated. During the long subsequent illness of one of the boys he undergoes a great change of heart, and then, succumbing to labor and contagion, he comes himself to the verge of death, being rescued only by the heroic endeavors of a rude country doctor. Last of all the boys, in time-honored fashion, discover the gold of the guerrillas to the amount of $13,000.

In spite of the somewhat hackneyed quality of the book, it has the knack of now and again tugging at the heart-strings. The character of the patient and long-suffering mother of the family is drawn with a faithfulness and sympathy that must almost of necessity be founded on actual experience and personal acquaintance with just such a woman. The book has an emotional and pathetic undercurrent, melodramatic perhaps, but as interesting as it is unexpected.

"A Boy's Vacation Abroad; an American Boy's Diary of His First Trip to Europe," (Boston: C. M. Clark Publishing Company,) is the title of a short volume written by C. F. King, Jr., who is a student at St. John's School, Manlius, N. Y., and whose home is in Winthrop, Mass. The boy goes for a trip to Europe during his Summer vacation, accompanied by his brother and father. They make a traveling companion of Pete McNally, the swimmer, whom they meet aboard ship, and Pete becomes young King's main authority on about everything. The boy has a passing glance at most of the big European cities. He comes back wiser, and, at the same time, more happy than ever to be an American.

The main interest of the book is the simple and boyish manner in which the record has been kept. The boy made the pictures with his own camera, and they are creditable. The only apology he makes in his introduction is: "A good deal of it was also written when I had to fight mosquitos with one hand while I was writing with the other. In Rome, Brindisi, Athens, and Constantinople I had to do this. The insects were also bothering me when I was trying to write in Naples, but I stuck to my post, and now it is finished."

TELEPATHY.

PHANTOM WIRES. A Novel. By Arthur Stringer, Author of "The Wire Tappers," "The Loom of Destiny," &c. Illustrated by Arthur William Brown. Pp. 295. Boston: Little, Brown & Co.

THIS new novel by Arthur Stringer is a sequel to his "Wire Tappers," which attracted some attention because of its unusual combination of good mechanism and literary quality, merits for which "Phantom Wires" is equally notable. The former story told of the tangling of two young people of upright instincts in the evil mysteries of the poolroom, of their mutual determination to help each other out of the ugly slough, their marriage, and flight. The present story takes up their fortunes in Europe, where with ill-luck and dwindling purses they have vainly endeavored to put the past behind them. But the necessities of daily life claim them and draw them back, separately and then together, into the very same bogs out of which they had tried to escape.

The novel belongs primarily with the stories of incident and adventure, but it has some admirable qualities in addition which these do not usually possess. It is one breathless adventure after another, with the suspense constantly sustained. Even an old stager at novel reading marvels at the fertility and deftness of Mr. Stringer's invention of incident. He manages to bring into almost all the happenings some unexpected factor which surprises the reader and keeps his interest at a high pitch. The tightening coil of circumstances around Jim and Frank Durkin brings them back to New York and into association with the same old gang whose ways they had abjured.

Under thin disguises appear such powers of the under world as Richard Canfield, Al Adams, and their lieutenants, and there is a brief scene with a District Attorney, whose portrait needs no identification. For a time both husband and wife almost despair, and say to themselves and to each other that it is no use fighting against the tide of circumstances which seems bound to sweep them back into the old whirlpool of crime. But they make a gallant fight, using the weapons of the criminal in making it, and finally they win—as those must who fight so bravely. But the way lies through such daring deeds and breathless adventures and hairbreadth escapes as convince the reader that the pirate of a commercial age can have just as exciting a life as did his predecessor of the Spanish Main.

But in addition to all this it must be counted in the book's favor that it is very deftly and convincingly woven together, that it is excellent and interesting in its presentation of character and motives, and that its exciting narrative is full of intellectual as well as emotional interest. Therein it differs from the usual American novel of adventure, which is prone to be very bald in its telling, like a vine that has grown out of a soil so poor and thin that it can put forth neither foliage nor flowers, and is able to show nothing but stems. The book takes its title from a sort of telepathic power with which husband and wife are invested, so that at times of great crisis they send intuitions of danger to each other. It is a risky theme, but the author handles it skillfully and with restraint.

HAMILTON BUSBY'S REMINISCENCES

Famous American Trotting Horses and Their Owners—Personal Experiences of an Authoritative Writer on the Turf and the Trotting Track.*

HAMILTON BUSBY'S identification with the American trotting turf has been so close and intimate that anything that he writes on the subject is bound to be received with respect. An association of nearly a half century with racing men and racers and breeders of racing stock equips him peculiarly for the critical position that he has occupied for decades, and his most conspicuous former volumes on "The Trotting and Pacing Horse in America" and "The History of the Horse in America" have stamped him as an authority whose judgment is rarely met by dissent. In his latest publication, "Recollections of Men and Horses," he has not written a critical book, but a series of reminiscences recalling personal experiences with the foremost figures of the trotting world that could not fail to be entertaining to any who have inbred the love of horses, especially as most of his recollections deal with men and horses of the past, whose names have been handed down to the younger generation of horsemen and who have now passed beyond the vale. The vein in which he writes is kindly and appreciative, and his personal participation in the events related so modestly recited that one finds nothing to mar the enjoyment of his stories.

***

Owners of Famous Trotting Horses.

The figures met in his book are those that occupied the very forefront of trotting in its early days, and a few who to-day remain. Robert Bonner, C. J. Hamlin, J. Malcolm Forbes, Leland Stanford, William H. Vanderbilt, Marcus Daly, and a few others of the most influential of the trotting turfmen occupy the most prominent positions in his narrative, while among those whose names occur in incidental connection with incidents that marked their impress upon trotting history are Gen. Grant, George B. Raymond, A. J. Cassatt, Gen. Benjamin Tracy, E. H. Harriman, and other men of affairs. The latter-day owners of champions—C. K. G. Billings, Elmer E. Smathers, George Ketchum, and others—appear incidentally, since Mr. Busby deals rather with the early than with the recent history of trotting events.

Opening with the foundation of the trotting breeding industry, he follows its course from Flora down to the present champions, Lou Dillon and Major Delmar, telling many entertaining facts regarding Dexter, Rarus, Sunol, Jay-Eye-See, and the queen of them all, in sentimental recollection at least, Maud S., and later with the introduction of the pneumatic and ball-bearing sulky and the windshield, through Nancy Hanks, Alix, The Abbot, Cresceus, and Lou Dillon, until the book without intending to do so traces the lowering of the world's record to its present standard, giving true value to the various performances in the perspective of years, shedding some light on extraneous conditions that affected the record breaking, and altogether adding much to the store of public information on a subject that must ever hold a fascination for the lover of the sport.

Robert Bonner's Experience with Trotters.

In its professed intention of merely reciting reminiscences of the experience of one trotting devotee, albeit a prominent and influential one, the book is most worthy of consideration. Among the many interesting stories recited, perhaps the most interesting are illustrated by letters written by Robert Bonner that deal, first, with the development of the trotter, and, second, with the sentimental queen of the turf, Maud S. On the first score Mr. Bonner says, in a letter written in the Spring of 1895, in commenting on the advance of trotting:

> In July, 1856, when I bought my first trotting horse, there were only nineteen horses, including the living and the dead, that had trotted a mile in 2:30. Now there are 10,539 in the list. In the Summer of that year—1856—I came near breaking down from overwork. My personal friend and family physician, Dr. Samuel Hall, advised me to get a horse and take an hour's exercise in the open air every morning. He not only gave me this advice, but he actually purchased the horse for me. So that if I have done anything to stimulate the interest that nearly all Americans take in the trotting horse the credit is due in no small degree to Dr. Hall. The increase, when you come to think of it, in one man's lifetime from 19 to 10,539 seems to be almost beyond belief. * * *
> Besides such record breakers as Dexter, (2:17¼,) Rarus, (2:13¼,) Maud S., 2:08¾,) and Sunol, (2:08¼,) I have owned Alfred S., record 2:16¼; Edwin Forrest, record 2:18—trial 2:11¾; Pickard, record 2:18¼; Angel, record 2:20; Music, record 2:21¼; Molsey, record 2:21¾; Joe Elliott, the first horse to trot a public trial in 2:15½; May Bird, 2:21; Peerless, trial 2:23¼ to wagon, driven by Hiram Woodruff—the fastest mile the great driver ever drove any horse; Elfrida, record 2:13½; Grafton, record 2:22; Pocahontas, record 2:20¾, trial 2:17¾; Startle, the first Eastern-bred three-year-old to get a record of 2:36 and the first horse to trot a public trial on Fleetwood in 2:19. To this list I could add Maud Macey, Lady Stout, and several others with records better than 2:30, to say nothing of Lady Palmer and Flatbush Maid, the first pair to trot a public trial in 2:26, over thirty years ago.
>
> In a memorandum in 1897, Mr. Bonner stated he had expended about $600,000 in the purchase of trotting horses. "To those friends who have criticised me for having paid so much money for horses, I may be pardoned for saying that I have given away a much larger sum for religious and benevolent purposes. But the thing of all others in connection with horses, if I except the great benefit to my health from driving them which necessarily kept me outdoors, that has afforded me the most gratification is the improvement that I have been able to make in the speed of those I have purchased and the consequent relief from suffering and lameness the poor animals experienced after coming into my possession and having their feet treated under my direction."

Maud S. and Jay-Eye-See.

With respect to the acquirement of Maud S. and her subsequent breaking of her world's records, Mr. Busby quotes a memoranda from Mr. Bonner announcing the sale of the mare by W. H. Vanderbilt. It says:

> Probably no prominent man ever paid another so marked a compliment as W. H. Vanderbilt has just paid Robert Bonner. Maud S., as all intelligent horsemen know, has the fastest record of any trotting horse in the world. She is the only animal that has ever trotted a mile in less than 2:10—her record being 2:08¾—a figure that was deemed impossible a few years ago. Mr. Vanderbilt was lately offered $100,000 for her, but he declined it, preferring to sell the mare for less than half that sum to Mr. Bonner, who he knew would not trot her in public races. Last Friday he sent a friend expressly from Saratoga to inform Mr. Bonner of these facts, and on Saturday Mr. Bonner sent his brother David up to Saratoga to confer with Mr. Vanderbilt. The result was that Mr. Bonner purchased the mare on Monday evening. The price paid was $40,000. Of the seven great trotters that have broken the record, to wit: Flora Temple, Dexter, Goldsmith Maid, Rarus, St. Julien, Jay-Eye-See, and Maud S., Mr. Bonner now owns three—Dexter, Rarus, and Maud S. Mr. Bonner was asked: "Suppose Jay-Eye-See should break Maud S.'s record, what would you do then?" His reply was characteristic: "Buy him, too, if I could, or put Maud S. in training at some good track like Charter Oak Park, at Hartford, and give the public a free exhibition of speed."
>
> It was just before this that Maud S. had made her record of 2:09¾. Her old mark had been 2:10¼, and Jay-Eye-See had lowered that to 2:10. The day following the Jay-Eye-See performance Maud S. started at Cleveland and made a record of 2:09¾. Mr. Vanderbilt was then considerably annoyed by efforts to secure a match between the two trotters despite his well-known antipathy to racing. It was this more than anything else that determined him to sell the mare to Mr. Bonner, who shared his views regarding racing. All sorts of efforts were made to induce Mr. Bonner to depart from his long-established principle, but the most that could be done was to secure his assent to a trial against time at Hartford for a cup to commemorate her performance. This trial took place on Nov. 11, 1884, and a warming-up mile was covered in 2:26¾. Then the great mare was sent against the watch.
>
> All eyes were fixed on the handsome chestnut as she came down the home stretch for the supreme trial and Bair nodded for the word. The first quarter was a slow one, owing to the turn, but Maud S. trotted it in 32¾ seconds. The wind then struck her in the face, and it took her 1:04 to reach the half-mile pole, which was a second slower than the schedule prepared by Bair previous to the start. At the three-quarter pole the watches split on 1:37, and then the queen was encouraged by a running horse driven by Bowerman starting in behind her. As she came strongly down the stretch Bair touched her with the whip, and she gamely responded. The judges stopped their watches in 2:09¾, thus making her beat the record by half a second, or about 22 feet. The majority of outside watches, including Mr. Bonner's, made the time 2:09. This stood until she broke it in the following July and registered 2:08¾.

Similar incidents find place in the book of recollections, and to the participants in the scenes, to refresh them in memory, will give keen pleasure. To those who read of them for the first time they are to be entertainingly told in the direct, interesting style that marks Mr. Busby's writings.

WORKERS FOR PEACE.

AMONG THE WORLD'S PEACEMAKERS. An Epitome of the Interparliamentary Union. Edited by Hayne Davis, Secretary of the American Delegation to the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Conferences of the Interparliamentary Union. Pp. 400. New York: The Progressive Publishing Company. Cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.

THE sessions of the Arbitration and Peace Congress, which are to be held in this city during the coming week, make especially timely the appearance of this account by Mr. Hayne Davis of the origin, history, and achievements of the Interparliamentary Union, its efforts to make universal between nations the reign of peace and law, and the immediate tasks which it has set itself to accomplish. A hopeful introduction is written by Andrew Carnegie, who, after a brief glance at what has been won for the principles of arbitration and co-operation between nations in recent years, declares that "lasting peace is certainly drawing nearer." He outlines very briefly the plan for international tribunals with an international police power, which would take the place of separate national armies and navies, and would administer international law, restore peace when broken, and punish peace-breakers. Upon the establishment of such an international police power he thinks all those who desire to abolish war should now concentrate their efforts.

Mr. Davis has not aimed to write a succinct history of this movement toward international peace and friendliness. He has brought together and edited a great mass of material—magazine articles, newspaper accounts and interviews, conversations, biographical sketches—which will be to the future historian a trustworthy and most fruitful source of information. He begins with the memorial drawn up by William Randall Cremer, member of Parliament, signed by a number of his fellow-members and presented by them to President Cleveland and Congress in 1887, urging the passage of a treaty of arbitration. That was the beginning of the movement. Its next step was a visit by Mr. Cremer the next year to Paris, where he induced a number of French statesmen to issue a call to members of the British and French Parliaments to a joint conference for the discussion of international arbitration. The conference met in October of 1888. The second meeting was held in the Summer of 1889, at which were present members from the Parliaments of France, England, the United States, Belgium, Hungary, Italy, and Norway. Since then the Interparliamentary Union has been steadily growing. At its fourteenth session, held last Summer in London, there were 2,000 members, of whom 500 represented twenty-three different nations, present.

Mr. Davis glances quickly over the earlier sessions of the union in various European capitals, and then takes up the meeting that was held in St. Louis in the Autumn of 1904. With this he goes into detail, reprinting magazine articles, newspaper accounts, interviews, and editorials, showing the welcome that was given to the union in America, the interest aroused by its ideas and plans, and the support which it received. All this, he says, was very surprising to the members from Europe, accustomed as they were to scant interest and almost hostility on the part of the press and the upper-class public in their home countries. The proceedings of the congress at Brussels the next year are also recounted very fully, with some of the speeches that were made upon the plan proposed by Mr. Richard Bartholdt for a permanent international congress. Following this are reprints of magazine articles by Mr. Bartholdt, Prof. John Bassett Moore, Señor Diego Mendoza, and others upon the proposals of Mr. Bartholdt and his American associates in the union to convert The Hague Conference into a permanent body.

The meeting held last Summer in London is treated in the same complete way. Then follow biographical sketches of the men who have been prominent in the Interparliamentary Union in its efforts to reach a solid, practical basis upon which to found the peace of the world—the Hon. Richard Bartholdt, Baron d'Estournelles de Constant, Lord Weardale, Henri la Fontaine, Count Albert Apponyi, and others. In the appendix there is a list of twelve suggestions, with a discussion of each, put forward as a basis on which an international congress could be organized. The volume contains a large number of illustrations, mainly portraits.

THE COVERS OF BOOKS.

MODERN BOOKBINDINGS. Their Design and Decoration. By S. T. Prideaux. Pp. 152. With 53 half-tone illustrations. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $3 net.

NOWHERE has the revival of the applied arts that has been going on for the last quarter of a century been more conspicuously successful than in the binding of books. Modern facilities, cheaper material, and a more accurate and wholesome, if not more original, artistic spirit have made beautifully bound books accessible to moderate purses without impairing the monopoly of the rich, whose efforts to maintain uniqueness have continued to strain to the utmost mechanical devices and artistic endeavor. The recent development of bookbinding and its relation to the preservation of literary gems has not been unlike the development of the jeweled casket and its relation to its treasured contents which characterized the artistic spirit of the Italian Renaissance.

Special attention is given in Miss S. T. Prideaux's book on "Modern Bookbinding" to the work that is being done in England and France in this field of art. The author touches briefly upon the craft of twenty-five years ago, her object being to show the achievements in bookbinding during the last quarter of a century. From 1850, when gilt tooling was brought from France to England, binding showed French influence until the time of the Restoration, when Samuel Mearne, the King's bookbinder, inaugurated the "cottage" form of decoration, which, although reminding one of the work of Le Gascon, still remained distinctly English. Improvements in the matter of tools, &c., have been made since then, especially in the designs which, when used a few times, are never now repeated. While bookbinders and their craft may best be studied in London, there are several other centres in England where they flourish and where they have been touched by that movement for developing the artistic as well as the business side of the art. Among the better known English "provincial" binders are Fazakerly in Liverpool, Birdsall in Northampton, and Chivers in Bath.

In treating of modern French binding, special attention is called to the exhibits in the Galliera Museum in Paris, where can be seen the work of Ruban, Mercier, Gruel, Michel, Lortic, Pierre Roche, and many others, examples of whose bindings are presented in the illustrations.

In the third and last part of the volume Miss Prideaux considers "Edition Binding." She treats of that kind of work which is done in certain quantities by machinery, and for decorating which metal dies are cut and stamped by means of an embossing press, either with or without the addition of colors or gold leaf. Beginning with a brief account of the stages through which this work has passed in modern times, the author shows how it was treated in the early days of printing, and finally offers suggestions for its more varied and more artistic treatment in the future.

MELINE'S NATURAL ECONOMY.

MESSRS. E. P. DUTTON publish "The Return to the Land," by Senator Jules Méline, leader of the Moderate Republicans in France, and at former times Minister of Commerce, Minister of Agriculture, and Premier. Justin McCarthy writes an introduction for this edition, and says:

> The great object of the book is to convince the world that the return to the land, and to the work which the land still offers in all or most countries, is now the nearest and the surest means for the mitigation or the removal of the troubles which have come to the working populations everywhere, and that the present is the appropriate time for the beginning of such a movement.

A discussion in the first part of the book of the more usual economic questions of the growth of manufacture, overproduction, &c., brings M. Méline to his statement and interpretation of the problems of the agriculturist and his plea for the return to the land. The work is primarily a treatment of French situations, but its thorough, though general, and suggestive treatment, promises interesting reading for Americans.

Mediæval Towns.

Messrs. Henry Holt & Co. are adding to their Historical Miscellany Series a volume involving the work of seven historical scholars. It is a translation of the chapter by Giry and Reville on "The Emancipation of the Mediæval Towns" in Lavisse and Rambaud's Histoire Générale. The translation has been done by Prof. F. G. Bates and Mr. P. E. Titsworth of Alfred University, under the editorship of Prof. E. W. Dow of the University of Michigan, the editor of the series. Rocher's Spanish Colonial System and Seignobos's Feudal Régime have previously appeared.

INVALUABLE GROVE.

The Third Volume of Dr. Futter Maitland's New Edition of the Great Dictionary of Music.*

THE third volume of Grove's "Dictionary of Music" in the new edition appears, as is almost inevitable in a work of this magnitude, somewhat later than the time set for it. The revision has been thorough, perhaps not at all points so thorough as might have been wished, but it has the invaluable qualities which the previous volumes have represented and for which every musician and musical amateur will prize it—completeness in covering the vast field of musical history and literature, fullness of information, and interest of presentation.

The volume will no doubt be assailed, as its predecessors have been, for what it does and does not contain, but it deserves the highest commendation for approaching as nearly as it does to meeting the demands that can properly be made on such a work. Mr. Fuller Maitland, the editor, is of course subject to severe animadversion for lacking omniscience and the power to satisfy everybody in regard to the proportion of space which he has allotted to different subjects, especially to musicians of the present day. Some will complain that the contemporaneous French school is not sufficiently enlarged upon, though others will consider that its members have not yet sufficiently established their art and their principles to entitle them to the greatest amplitude of space. Others will complain that too much attention is given to Englishmen, forgetting that this is an English dictionary, primarily intended for the use of Englishmen, and therefore giving more space to English music than, for instance, a German or a French dictionary would do. There are doubtless names and titles omitted that it would have been well to have, and doubtless, also, space is not distributed among the published articles in accordance with the abstract and ultimate decree of fate as to relative importance.

There are many new articles that represent the results of recent historical investigations; such are the articles on the "Monochord," in which the most recent view of the Greek system is embodied. The "Ecclesiastical Modes" and a number of other matters pertaining to mediæval church music, as "Plain Song," &c., are now treated by the Rev. W. H. Frere in the light of present knowledge, whose articles are substituted for those of W. S. Rockstro. And it may further be noted that the writings of that fine, cruety old English gentleman that have been retained have been ruthlessly edited down to the level of modern typographical rules. Who would not prefer to read, for instance, the "Christian Aera" and the "History of Antient Greece," in capitals as erratic as FitsGerald's, rather than the commoner form of those names? "Notation" is another new article, by C. F. Abdy Williams, substituted for Mr. Rockstro's and disclosing new light on the history of that subject. Mr. Rockstro is also cut off in his history of opera, at the point where "modern opera" sets in, whence onward the work is Mr. R. A. Streatfeild's. And, alas, Mr. Rockstro has been again edited here, and we are no longer allowed to divide our operatic history into twenty periods, nor our history of oratorio into fifteen. The latter article is cut off likewise at the beginning of the modern period, and the work is carried on in a more modern spirit by Ernest Walker.

There is a new article about "Military Sounds and Signals," and one about the Psalter. The Mozart biography is enlarged, and there is an addition to it on the spurious masses attributed to Mozart. Grove's elaborate Mendelssohn biography is kept intact. New and interesting facts are added to the account of the development of "Music Printing." Of course there is provision made for the men who have arisen or have come into prominence since the first edition was published: Mascagni, Moussorgsky, Puccini, for instance.

In this volume, as in the previous two, there is a much fuller treatment of American subjects than in the first edition. Thus MacDowell, Mills, Paine, Parker, Maud Powell, have ample biographies. New York musical societies, American musical periodicals, negro music of the United States, have much space given to them. One of the most important of these articles is that on "Opera in the United States," in which Mr. Krehbiel's work of original research is substituted for the quite vague and inadequate treatment of the subject in the first edition.

The new volume, like its predecessors, is furnished with a number of portraits, twenty-three in number; they are of unequal excellence, but their average is higher than that of the previous volumes. Among these portraits are those of the Americans MacDowell, Paine, and Parker, and there are furthermore pictures of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, and the Cristofori pianoforte, which is one of the choicest treasures of the Crosby Brown collection of musical instruments in the Metropolitan Museum.

ADVENTURES IN SUPERLATIVE.

TIBERIUS SMITH. As Chronicled by His Right-Hand Man, Billy Campbell. By Hugh Pendexter. Pp. 331. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

IF Hugh Pendexter had tried to apply to fiction the methods of the cartoonist in illustration he would probably have written just such a book as "Tiberius Smith." For every one of its sixteen chapters relates an adventure with all its characteristic features exaggerated and made grotesque to the point of absurdity. And the book depends for its interest very largely upon the humor of its caricature. If such was the author's intention his experiment has been successful, and the story takes on an interest other than that of a mere succession of humorous tales. Tiberius Smith is represented as a showman and a collector of show attractions, whose work takes him into far-away corners of the earth. Now he is running a revolution in a remote town in a South American State and vanquishing his enemies by using his moving picture machine to throw lifelike pictures of moving armies and cavalry charges and death-dealing lines of men upon a high white cliff in the face of the foe. Next he is playing poker with a lot of bloodthirsty giants inside the arctic circle for the lives of himself and his faithful Billy Campbell. Again, he lets loose the gambling fever in a tribe of natives far up a Brazilian river, and wins life and freedom by making a stock ticker out of a bark bird cage. Then when he and his companion are about to be eaten by some other natives somewhere else he pitches ball for the native ball players with wonderful curves, the cannibals standing around with arrows ready to let fly the moment the batter succeeds in making a strike. Presently their wanderings carry them to Northern Vermont, where the natives have had no news since "before the war," and with a bandpress and yellow journal methods they awaken the place and line their pockets. Tiberius is a master of resource, and no matter how hopeless the situation nor how imminent the threatened death his quick invention and his showman's audacity are always equal to the emergency. The rough and ready conversational style of the narrative and the grotesque humor of its similes and comparisons—such as "freshly lanndered soul," "ingrowing forehead," "burglar-proof prejudice"—make a fitting garb for the breezy, absurd, amusing tale.

DETECTIVE STORIES.

MARTIN HEWITT, INVESTIGATOR. By Arthur Morrison. Illustrated. Cloth, 12mo. Pp. 216. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

THE DANGERVILLE INHERITANCE. A Detective Story. By A. G. Fox-Davies. Pp. 312. 12mo. Cloth. London and New York: John Lane Company. $1.50.

ONE of the wisest men of our acquaintance had an unconquerable dislike for riddles, and would say, when anything of the kind was propounded to him. "If you love me, don't puzzle me!" Most men, however, cannot be of his way of thinking, as is proved by the world-wide fondness for all sorts of mystifications. To this popularity must be attributed the uniform success of stories having to do with the ferreting out of crime. Lawyers are wont to speak with a good deal of disparagement of the men who engage in this work; but for the general public, upon whom depends the success of a play or a novel, they have an inexhaustible fascination. Martin Hewitt, having been remarkably successful, as a lawyer's clerk, in obtaining evidence in a difficult case, decided to go to work upon his own account, and he gives to one of his friends, an enterprising journalist, the particulars of a few of his successes. The stories present many varied phases of crime, and they are very well told.

"The Dangerville Inheritance" is a novel of incident rather than of character. The scene is laid in England, and the decidedly involved plot is somewhat of the Wilkie Collins pattern. A perplexing murder case is the chief event upon which the interest centres, and there are plenty of those surprises common to stories of this type. The final outcome is slightly irritating from its shock to one's sense of probability. It is scarcely a novel which anybody would be likely to read a second time, but may serve to while away some vacant hours.

Sinclair in Spanish.

It is to be hoped that the delicate feelings of the Chicago packers will not be hurt by a new title given to Mr. Upton Sinclair's book. The well-known publisher of Madrid, Fernando Fe, has issued "The Jungle" in Spanish, calling it "Los Monstruos de Chicago" ("The Poisoners of Chicago").

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

TALKING about septuagenarians—and it has become the fashion now to make a sort of festival of every writer's seventieth birthday — how about John Burroughs? Ten days ago our foremost living writer on the life out of doors and the birds and trees celebrated his seventieth birthday, cheerfully and gratefully, no doubt, but without a single hurrah or a murmur. John Burroughs was born April 3, 1837, in Roxbury, N. Y. He was, by turns, school teacher, Treasury clerk, and bank examiner in his younger days, but for a full generation he has dwelt in peace on a farm, cultivating the fruits of the earth and the fruits of the mind. He does not often find his way to the busy haunts of men, but when he does he is sure of a cordial welcome, for he has friends everywhere, and a host of readers for his good books. Once in a while he is heard of as the friend and companion of a nature-loving Chief Magistrate. Sometimes he emerges into the field of public discussion to express vigorously his opinions of the sentimentalists who write about animals. All who have met John Burroughs have felt the charm of his personality; all who have read his books feel that they owe him a lasting debt of gratitude. The author of "Wake Robin," "Pepacton," "Birds and Poets," and "Winter Sunshine" needs no public celebrations of his birthdays to keep him in the minds of his readers.

DR. WILLIAM HENRY DRUMMOND, the Canadian poet, whose death was announced last week, wrote for the love of writing and of the subjects he wrote about. His work was never consigned, in the language of the old shipping reports, to "Cowes and a market." His name had been before the public as a writer only ten years, and in that time his first volume of collected poems called "The Habitant" had been printed and reprinted twenty-six times. He was an Irishman by birth, a practicing physician, and a copper mine owner. He was about 53 years old. A resident of Montreal, the romance and humor and picturesqueness of French Canadian life charmed him, and he wrote his little poems in the patois of Quebec Province, for his own satisfaction and the edification of his friends. He had accumulated enough of the verses to make a book before he consented to look for a publisher. Besides "The Habitant" he published "Johnny Courteau" and "The Voyageur." It is proof of the verity of Dr. Drummond's studies of the habitant that his little books were most popular in Canada, and among Canadians the world over, who knew the French habitant well.

IT must please those English folks who are always audibly complaining of the purchase of English literary and art treasures by wealthy Americans to know that American bidders were outbid by Bernard Quaritch at the sale of the Van Antwerp books in Sotheby's, when the celebrated Rowfant-Locker-Lampson copy of the Shakespeare First Folio was put up. Still Mr. Quaritch is not in the business of bidding high at book auctions for his health, and it is just possible that some covetous and moneyed American may yet secure the best obtainable copy of the most prized rare book in the English language, at a price somewhat higher than that Mr. Quaritch paid for it. That price, however, is rather forbidding. A book that was worth a beggarly $2,275 a dozen years ago is now valued at $18,000. When the wayfaring man can buy a very good copy of Shakespeare's complete works for $1 or less, it does seem a bit surprising that a book full of strange printer's errors, queerly paged, and containing not all the plays now credited to Shakespeare should be so highly prized. But to the true bibliophile such expressions of amazement seem only the confession of ignorance. He does not collect First Folios for the sake of reading Shakespeare.

MR. JOHN T. McCUTCHEON'S new humorous volume called "Congressman Pumphrey, the People's Friend," (Bobbs, Merrill Company,) is made up largely of cartoons which have appeared in The Chicago Tribune. An introduction by the Hon. Joseph G. Cannon sets forth the idea of the Speaker of the House of Representatives that Mr. Pumphrey is a statesman of a purely imaginary type. In all the years Mr. Cannon has been busily employed in the Capitol at Washington Mr. Pumphrey has never got around to roll call. "He ought," says the Speaker, "to drop in on us once in a while in passing." Nevertheless, Pumphrey is a statesman of a type very familiar to readers of the comic press, a classification which may well fit many of the daily newspapers. At Minerva Junction Pumphrey is reformer and orator. At Washington he is as wax in the hands of lobbyists. He wins mysteriously large sums of money at poker, and is as dumb as a clam in the House. Pumphrey represents a popular idea. It is gratifying to learn from so good an authority as the Speaker that the idea is fallacious.

OUR cable dispatches have announced the enormous success in London of a new book by the Rev. R. J. Campbell, the non-conformist minister who preaches in the big City Temple, called "The New Theology." An American edition has now appeared with the imprint of the Macmillan Company, and a glance through its pages inclines one to the belief that it will have many readers here, though it is not a book that calls for critical review in a daily newspaper, or one that we care to invite discussion upon. Mr. Campbell writes with directness and force, and he disclaims any representative quality. He writes merely for himself, as the minister of the City Temple, and professes not to speak authoritatively for others. The phrase "New Theology," he says, is not of his invention or his choice. It has long been in use among those "who believe that the fundamentals of the Christian faith need to be restriculated in terms of the immanence of God." What is wanted, we are told, is not a new religion, but freshness and simplicity of statement. "The New Theology is an untrammeled return to the Christian sources in the light of modern thought." We gather from the book that Mr. Campbell is eloquent, sincere, and devout. Some of his chapter headings are: "God and the Universe," "The Nature of Evil," "The Atonement," "The Authority of Scripture," and "The Church and the Kingdom of God."

THERE are several new detective stories among the novels of the Spring, and good ones, too, that take the reader's mind off the cares of the working day and keep it off until the book is finished. But the newest and strangest of all the detective tales is "The Case of Dr. Horace," by John H. Prentis, which the Baker-Taylor Company publishes. This story is not to be commended for literary grace, and it undoubtedly lacks the sustained interest of the old-fashioned detective story. But its central idea is astonishingly new, and the purpose of the thing, to illustrate the importance of conscience in the detection of crime, is reasonably justified. Of course, the idea that the conscience of a criminal may be a factor in the detection of the crime is far from new in fiction; it is one of the oldest upon which plays and novels dealing with crime have been builded. But Dr. Horace does not believe much in conscience, while his friend does. They make a weger, and simulate a crime. The friend, the supposed murderer, wins the bet. He is not guilty, wherefore his conscience is easy, and he escapes arrest. But he barely escapes it, and the real hero of the yarn, a psychological young detective, is only balked by the imitation criminal's easy conscience. "The Case of Dr. Horace" is a short story, and it would be a better story if it were shorter. But its originality of design deserves a note of admiration.

THE London Academy has again changed owners and editors. Sir George Newnes has sold it to Sir Edward Tennant, and Lord Alfred Douglas, who has long been more or less in the public eye, but never hitherto as a critic of literature, is now the editor. Lord Alfred is a son of the late Marquis of Queensberry and brother of the present Marquis. He has published a volume of verse called "The Placid Pug, and Other Rhymes." We learn from Mr. Clement Shorter that Lady Alfred Douglas (who was Miss Olive Custance) is also a poet. Dr. Appleton, Mr. C. Lewis Hind, Mr. Teignmouth Shore, and Mr. Graham Anderson have been previous editors of The Academy. It was long owned by an American, Mr. John Morgan Richards, father of the late Mrs. Craigie.

RENE FRANCOIS ARMAND SULLY-PRUDHOMME, aged 68 years, and for nearly twenty-six years a member of the French Academy, has long been living in retirement at his suburban home, in Chatenay. Some time ago a little band of French poets, headed by François Coppée, paid him a formal visit, with speeches to deliver and poems to read, and a bit of sculpture to give him. Doubtless the old poet, who is ill in mind and body, was somewhat disturbed, but pleased also. Sully-Prudhomme is France's greatest living poet—as the really great poets of France are all dead. His muse is a small, somewhat finicky, philosophizing goddess, noting the "problems" rather than the passions of life. He is a poet somewhat akin to Matthew Arnold, and "Stances et Poemes," "Les Solitudes," "Le Bonheur," "La Revolté des Fleurs" are full of delicate art.

RADICAL THINKERS.

EXACTLY what is a "Radical" in England? The question is suggested by the curious variety in the group of names on the title page of a volume just published by Dr. John MacCunn, Professor of Philosophy in the University of Liverpool, "Six Radical Thinkers," (Longmans, Green & Co.). These are Bentham, John Stuart Mill, Richard Cobden, Thomas Carlyle, Giuseppe Mazzini, and Thomas Hill Green, all familiar enough, save possibly the last, to American readers of English political philosophy, but certainly not usually associated with each other. Even if we accept the grouping as to Bentham, Mill, and Cobden, it is not easy to understand what they have in common with Carlyle or, essentially, with Mazzini, while between Mill, for instance, and Bentham or Bentham and Cobden there is more difference, it would seem, than similarity. Nor is it plain why in what these half dozen thinkers have of likeness, they should be dubbed "Radical." The word appears rather one of general description than of definite classification. It is used to-day in the English press by different persons with a pretty consistent connotation, but applied to very unlike characters. Mr. Balfour, for instance, might very well call the Prime Minister a "Radical," and Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman might as readily call Mr. Burns by the same name, which Mr. Burns might deprecate and cite Mr. Keir Hardie as an example of what the real thing is in this line.

Though the basis of the grouping may be a little puzzling, we have to credit Dr. MacCunn with an extremely interesting series of essays in analytical criticism of a number of able and markedly individual men, whose separate influence on the thought of England has been unquestionably great. It is a distinct service to the students of this generation to trace with such care and lucidity, not only the teachings of the father of utilitarianism, Bentham, and of his disciple and successor, Mill, but the conditions amid which these teachings were produced and the way in which they have been justified or have failed of justification. Especially in the case of Mill, it is a service to point out so emphatically how much more than a disciple of Bentham he was, how much richer and more beneficent was the operation of his singularly penetrating mind, and how admirably his personal life fitted in with the influence of the best of his thinking. Only the other day one of our American magazines reproduced a speech of the English statesman, Goschen, in which he described a little brutally what he regarded as the "failure" of Mill in the House of Commons, but it would be difficult to name many members of the House whose success as such has left on the course of English thought or even of English legislation so deep and lasting a mark as was left by the work of Mill. In his case, as in that of Cobden, some rash predictions have not been fulfilled, and the opponents of their principles would fain interpret this fact as discrediting those principles. But the principles are not necessarily wrapped up in the predictions, and preaching may easily be sound where the prophet is a sad failure. The teaching of Cobden, and still more that of Mill, served to steady Great Britain in a policy that not only brought prosperity but secured its beneficent distribution to an extent unknown in other lands. It is the fashion in some quarters to speak of their ideas as outgrown. To some extent, naturally, they are. But their influence had more to do with the very important development of British sentiment within the past three years on economic questions than any other single element. It is likely to be for a long time yet a vital influence.

What is perhaps the most interesting and informing feature of Dr. MacCunn's little volume is the light it throws on the present tendencies of political thought among the class which formerly felt this influence to be practically controlling. They are very wholesome tendencies. Their direction is toward a considerable modification of the extreme individualism, which appealed so strongly to Mill, a modification which he, however, partially foresaw and welcomed. The general tone of the book is one of marked sanity.

A Danish Novel.

Peter Nansen's novel, "Love's Trilogy," has been translated from the Danish by Julia Le Gallienne, and is now published by Messrs. John W. Luce & Co.

JOHN DAVIDSON, REVOLUTIONIST.

The Dramatic Poet Yearns for a "New Cosmogony"—His Forthcoming Trilogy—Announcements of New Books.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES. Copyright, 1907.

LONDON, April 12.—According to John Davidson, the poet and writer of plays in verse, a "new cosmogony" is the literary and dramatic need of the day. Mr. Davidson's unusual plays, notably "The Theatrocrat," a piece dealing with the Church and the stage, always cause discussion, and just now he is bringing out, with Grant Richards, a new dramatic volume called "The Triumph of Mammon," the first of a triology of plays entitled "God and Mammon." In connection with this book Mr. Davidson announces a startling dramatic creed, briefly that it is all but impossible to write acting plays for the English etage at present, because the theatre is still content to accept the Christian economy, faith, and morality as fundamentals. This, by the way, is a curious point of view for the son of an English clergyman. Shakespeare, Davidson contends, has shown man the conditions of Christendom once and for all. There "if it were only that there might be a new drama, it would be necessary to have a new cosmogony." This theory, of course, arouses both interest and ridicule. "The Triumph of Mammon" is being issued, so the publishers announce, to celebrate the author's fiftieth birthday. It has been suggested, humoronsly, that as a further celebration some one ought to present Davidson with a brand new cosmogony.

MESSRS. ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO. announce a new novel called "William Jordan, Jr.," by John Collins Snaith, author of that popular story, "Broke of Covenden." The same firm promises several important works of a serious nature, including "European Animals," by R. S. Scraff, a volume of ten studies of the factors of modern history and their application to the problems of the present day by Prof. A. F. Pollard; a translation of Prof. Erman's "Handbook of Egyptian Religion," and an interesting little book on Shinto, the ancient religion of Japan, by W. G. Aston, who has written so much on Japanese subjects.

***

A BOOK called "Travel and Adventure in the Pygmy Country" has been written by J. Penman Browne, and will be published by Werner Laurie, who also has in hand two new novels. One is "Roger Dinwiddie, Soul Doctor," in which a novel psychological theory is advanced by the author, Miss Irvine. The other, by Fred Whishaw, deals with the persecution of the Jews in Russia. The Blackwoods announce the official history of the famous royal and ancient golf club of St. Andrews, by the great amateur golfer, H. S. C. Everard, one of the longest drivers in the world. The same house will publish a volume of travels called "In the Footsteps of Marco Polo" by Major Bruce.

GALBRAITH.

DRIFT OF LONDON LITERARY TALK.

LONDON, April 6.—The exuberant writer who styles herself "Rita" has just given the world her opinion of America and Americans in an essay called "The Amazing American!" which one reads with mingled feelings of amusement and indignation. "Rita" tells us she has "never been fortunate enough to meet an American gentleman or an American lady," a fact she attributes not to her lack of experience, but to America's lack of ladies and gentlemen. In business or in society the American, according to this comforting critic, is alike despicable. "He would sooner make a dollar by a trick," says she, "than earn a hundred by fair dealing." America, however, need not be utterly discouraged at all this, for "Rita" has an unenviable reputation as the author of the most violent attacks on all sorts of persons and institutions. Her sentences abound in harsh adjectives and exclamation points, and she delights in throwing literary vitriol on practically everything and everbody. Moreover, in the course of her essay "Rita" finds occasion several times to mention with pride that she has never been in America. "Heaven forefend," she exclaims, "that I should ever set foot in America!" And, very possibly, the "amazing Americans" who read her essay will be unhospitable enough to echo her wish.

***

ANOTHER book on which it will be interesting to have America's opinion is "The Wingless Victory," a week-old novel which English critics seem to be unanimous in regarding as a really important achievement, and one which lifts its author, Miss M. P. Willcocks, up into that small, select circle of the contemporary writers whose works really count. "The Wingless Victory" is a story of Devonshire, and, though it is certainly interesting, it is distinctly not the sort of book one reads to pass an idle hour. Indeed, it is so densely packed with wit and wisdom that it makes rather heavy reading. Critics, with hardly an exception, pronounce Miss Willcocks—who is, by the way, a school mistress—a second Thomas Hardy, meaning by that not an imitator but a worthy rival. It is still too early to determine, however, what readers will think of the book, and whether it will have a popular success. Very possibly it will be more widely read in America than here, for it is frequently remarked by those who know the literary tastes of both countries that American readers are far more willing to work over their novel reading than English. An example of this difference is noticed in the case of May Sinclair's "The Divine Fire," which, at the time when it had gone into fifteen editions in America, had sold only three or four editions here. The only explanation of this which has been suggested is that, although both nations recognized the merit of the book, the ordinary English reader found it too serious, an objection which, apparently, never occurred to the American. Why America, certainly a far gayer nation than England, should have this partiality for serious fiction it is difficult to say. The theory, however, that such is the case has been advanced so frequently that it is impossible to disbelieve it entirely.

WHAT is the shortest time in which any one ever completed a book? Of course, some one must hold the record, and it would be interesting, could the record holder be discovered, to arrange a competition in speedy writing between him and Mr. Eustace Miles, a well-known English vegetarian and the author of many volumes. Mr. Miles said the other day to an interviewer that in less than eighty hours he could write two books. It is to be presumed he did not mean eighty consecutive hours; possibly ten working days of eight hours each would be a fair interpretation of his remark. But even to write two books in ten days would certainly be a feat worth boasting of.

THAT the "dog is one of the pitfalls of literature" is the opinion of F. G. Afialo, the well-known writer on animals, and his advice to all novelists, except those who really understand the subject, is to leave dogs alone. "Few of us," continues Mr. Afialo, "can help a feeling of irritation when we see the false situations in which, either to develop the story or merely by way of extrinsic embroidery, man's first friend too often finds himself in print." One fictional dog in particular arouses Mr. Afialo's ire. That is the famous "Hound of the Baskervilles," in the Sherlock Holmes tale of that name. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle has, it seems, "thrown the most sacred creeds of the Kennel Club to the winds, and has given us," Mr. Afialo continues, "a terrific hybrid of mastiff and bloodhound, as large as a small lioness,' (whatever size that may indicate,) with 'small, deep-set eyes,' totally out of keeping with its pedigree." So Conan Doyle's monster is a freak and an impossibility, and if we are to take the word of Mr. Afialo—who is probably as reliable an authority as could be found—we shall be forced to add the terrible "Hound of the Baskervilles" to our list of shattered illusions.

***

AN unusual novel which is attracting some attention just now is Helene Vacaresco's "The King's Wife," (published by Werner Laurie.) Helene Vacaresco has become well known as the author of a series of reminiscences called "Kings and Queens I Have Known," and now that she has put her experience with royalty into a novel the result is distinctly interesting. She has, of course, introduced us to another mythical kingdom, of which, since the invention of Ruritania, enough have been invented to cover the whole globe many times over. Less romantic than Anthony Hope, Mlle. Vacaresco interests us by giving what seems a real picture of life at Court; the toadying of the Court ladies and gentlemen is described with an almost cruel humor. Another interesting feature of the book is the Grand Duke and Duchess to whom we are introduced. They have three unmarried daughters whom they are striving to "get off," and unexpectedly a royal Prince proposes for one of them. Their wild joy at the fine marriage they attempt to cloak with dignity and the description of the old Duke pretending to hold back from the suggested alliance is extremely laughable. Finally the young people are betrothed, the Prince obviously much against his will, the girl stupidly indifferent, and we hear the Court folk chattering about "the beautiful love match" and the dear Prince who was so much in love he tipped over the tea table in his eagerness to kiss the bride. Altogether, though perhaps not a startling achievement as a novel, it is an extremely interesting book, because of its descriptions of the way royal people really live, written by a person who has had many chances to observe Kings and Queens. Mlle. Vacaresco has been maid of honor to the Queen of Roumania, and it is known she was once engaged to marry a royal Prince, so we may take it for granted she knows her royalty well.

GALBRAITH.

A NOVEL OF INCIDENT.

THE IRON WAY. A Tale of the Builders of the West. By Sarah Pratt Carr. Illustrated. Pp. 367. 12mo. Cloth. Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co.

THE reader who craves exciting incidents, hairbreadth escapes, glimpses of wild life in a particularly wild and rugged time, will certainly find plenty of such material in this romance of the West. Here we have station agents scalped by Indians; Chinamen talking voluble pidgin English, and exulting in displays of their clever confectionery; workmen rescued from trains wrecked by breaking trestles; wild stage-coach races; murderous attacks in barrooms, and many other kindred episodes natural to the time and place in which the scene is laid. It is fairly presumable that much of the story is a transcript from real life, for the preface informs us that the authoress is the daughter of one of the pioneers of the Central Pacific Railway, and that a large part of her youth was passed among those who, like her father, were interested in everything affecting the railway, and the region through which it was to pass. Her parents were among the many who went from New England to California in the early days of the discovery of gold, and she was carried, as an infant, across the Isthmus. The pictures illustrate the text in a fitting manner, and portray several more or less thrilling scenes.

Dr. Gulick's Book.

The publishers of Dr. Gulick's book, "The Efficient Life," Messrs. Doubleday, Page & Co., have received letters from President Henry MacCracken of New York University, and Edward B. Shallow, Superintendent of New York Public Schools. Dr. MacCracken writes in part: "Dr. Gulick's volume, 'The Efficient Life,' I found to be a most readable and helpful book upon the everyday needs of our physical life. I not only found its suggestions stimulating, but the form in which they are presented most attractive." Mr. Shallow writes in the course of his letter: "To the man who broods over his physical ills—real or imaginary; to the man who neglects his opportunity of becoming physically strong, and to the man who wants to know how to economise his time and energy, I commend Dr. Gulick's book, 'The Efficient Life.'"

Antipodal Novelists.

The new novelist, Marjorie Bowen, has obtained from Mr. Clemens permission to give "The Master of Stair" the following dedication: "To Mark Twain, with deep gratitude for the flattering interest shown by a great man of letters in the work of a beginner."

English Like "American Scene."

Henry James has pleased The Spectator of London by his book on America, "The American Scene," which was so unquestionably satisfactory to Americans. The Spectator says that "it is the most original book of travels we have ever read, and to the careful reader one of the most illuminating."

THERE IS a quality of freshness and springtime gladness about Anison North's first novel, "Carmichael." It is a winning story of real people, that appeals to every sound human heart and mind. "The love tale is told charmingly," says the Sun. "Good stuff," says the Brooklyn Citizen. It is surely a story that will make its way into thousands of homes for many years to come. ($1.50.)

Equally prepossessing is the story of a white man's love for an Indian woman: "My Life as an Indian," by J. W. Schultz. The author describes with powerful simplicity a life so full of color and incident that the book is assured of a place in our literature. "One of the most authoritative and interesting revelations of Indian life that we have seen," says the Literary Digest. (Illustated. $1.65 ostpaid.)

"Birds Every Child Should Know," by Neltje Blanchan, is rapidly becoming our most successful issue in the Every Child Should Know series, in which "Poems," "Songs," and "Fairy Tales" figure prominently. It is by the author of "Bird Neighbors." 63 pages of charming photographs. ($1.32 postpaid.)

We hope all readers of the Times have read "The Sovereign Remedy," by Flora Annie Steel. It is a book of real literary distinction—a book we believe in ($1.50.)

THE VIEWS OF MANY READERS.

A Frank Expression of Opinion in Regard to the Contents of Last Saturday's Number of The New York Times Book Review.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

ALLOW me a few words in criticism of last Saturday's number of THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW, and if they are not kindly, why let us believe for the nonce that a letter to THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW is not bound to be kindly. I don't know whether you will print my letter, and I don't greatly care, but I guess I can spare a stamp in a vain attempt to benefit some of your professional critics.

A greater proportion than usual of last Saturday's critiques were void of any sense. The review of J. Donaldson's "Woman and Her Position in Ancient Greece and Rome" by Hildegarde Hawthorne was the merest buncombe. Why did she write if she had nothing to say? No one can know in what way the author has done his work, what is the nature of this work, or how it is to be rated from anything that Miss Hawthorne says. "We women of this age," she begins in her third paragraph, and then emits a common school girl's giggle, as if she had lost her head in the presence of a mass audience. Then for two columns' length she treats us to a boarding school rehash of two or three facts in Greek history. I only hope she may live to read "The Deipnosophists" and old Petronius's "Banquet."

She, of course, is impossible as a critic for the first page.

Then Madison Cawein attempts a review of "The Far Horizon" with some little success. He has imagination and insight, but he doesn't seem to know how to present his case. I feel that he is convinced of the power and quality of Lucas Malet's novel, but he doesn't convince me of it. And if any one else is convinced it won't be by means of this little essay in impressionistic criticism. Its results are fragmentary.

The anonymous "skit" on Swinburne savors of the Encyclopaedia Britannica overnight, and is a fairly good example of the literary sham. This writer may learn later not to substitute words for thoughts.

How different from all this is Mr. Edward Cary's review of President Hadley's volume of addresses! It makes no pretension to intransience, and yet here is a critic who takes his eyes off himself and gets down to work. It is illuminating, fresh, and, above all, honest. For when his thought lags he quotes instead of pretending to think, and the clear light of culture and fine critical taste stream over every sentence.

H. W. Boynton again does workmanlike work and infuses life into a review of a dry and unsatisfactory book by his own limpid style of criticism and the ease and grace of his literary form. Miss E. L. Cary is not so successful in her work on Henry James's latest. But, then, the author of "The Golden Bowl" is as dry as dust himself. So that we wish her well for the sake of good work done before.

In W. A. Bradley's critique on Cowley we are introduced to a genuine master workman. The man, the material, and the occasion meet, and the result comes pretty close to perfection. I trust that we may have the pleasure of hearing from him again soon.

I don't know who Miss Estelle Duclo may be, but her sonnet to Markham is "a gem of purest ray." There has not been any as good as this since the last one from William Stanley Braithwaite.

There, now, I have given you both censure and praise; the one is as needful and as salutary as the other.

A. C. Benson.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Mr. A. C. Benson is enjoying a splendid vogue to-day, and justly so, it seems, for while his essays are not of Matthew Arnold depths yet they are apt and timely, possessing a crispness and freshness quite in keeping with the spirit of things modern. If their essence is not always right their expression is invariably so, and in many instances he echoes if not the popular voice, at least the proper viewpoint. For example: In "The Upton Letters" one reads with profit his thoughts on education and religion. He urges with reiterated emphasis the doctrine of individual culture; the concentration of one's energies on that which one is distinctly fitted for. In other words, he brings before one's gaze the wisdom of the immortal bard who said, "No profit goes where is no pleasure ta'en affect—that, Sir, which you most admire!" Again, in his religious notes we catch a glimpse of the individual gospel and an urgent cry for less of the old and dry and much worn out conventionalities, and more of the vital touch of twentieth century freshness; less dogma and more soul; less bloodless dynamics and a more heartfelt and life-like evangel. The pulpit must be quickened with the leaven of a live inspiration and not a traditional didacticism!

Mr. Benson's literary criticisms on the semi-modern and distinctly modern novelists are quite delightfully original, beginning with the Brontës and concluding with George Meredith and Moore—they are well and comprehensively summed up. That, too, "From a College Window" one sees the world in its prismatic colors, varying in depth and insight according to the real enthusiasm of the author. One can see where he truly feels the breath of life and where he merely imagines it. The chapter on art is good, as is that on priests.

One crosses the threshold of these essays to find much pleasure in its "Lares et Penates," with an occasional gem quite Emersonian in quality. To quote directly and appealingly, Mr. Benson says that "the real interest of literature is the apprehending of other points of view; one spends an immense time in what is called society in the pursuit of other people's views, but what a very little gain results from an intolerable deal of chaff! And all because people are conventional and not simple minded." "One who devotes himself to writing," for instance, "should find there his chief joy in the practice of his art, not in the rewards of it!" "Of all the shifting pageant of life, by far the most interesting and exquisite part is our relations with the other souls who are bound on the same pilgrimage. One desires ardently to know what other people feel about it all—the criticism, then, or discussion of other people is not so much a cause of interest in life as a sign of it. Simplicity, to be successfully attained, must be the result of a passionate instinct, not of a picturesque curiosity."

Byron.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

J. F. A. Pyre has done some of us a personal service with his "Byron in Our Day" in the April Atlantic. His study of the bard of Newstead is the most competent I know of since Matthew Arnold's. And it surpasses Arnold's in that it goes further in analyzing skillfully the man as well as the poet, and has more good red blood. Had Byron been a Tory instead of a Whig, he would have come down to posterity painted in more favorable colors. But he saw the hollowness of the elect. He told too much truth to be forgiven. He was guilty of bravery. His democracy was something irregular and scandalous. Not in volumes could his poetry be classified more accurately than in six words from the anonymous British singer's tribute of six years ago:

"His verses brace while others' tire."

Ponder that line, you Swinburnes, you idolaters of manner above matter! (Yet we must not forget that even Swinburne is fair enough to credit Byron with a noble sincerity.) Give me the verdict of Goethe, Macaulay, Arnold, Henley, and Pyre rather than the cloistered ipse dixit of the captious or fish blooded. To my mind the prevalent indifference to "Childe Harold's" creator, like the antipathy which has never slept from his day to ours, was born of prejudice and pharisaism, plus incapacity to understand, much less shore, Byron's—and man's—own generous impulses.

To every hater of cant and sham; to every foe of tyranny, temporal or spiritual; to every chafer at Formality, daughter of Hypocrisy; to every suffering soul that finds at once its exaltation and its calm in the play of lightning, the crash of thunder, the roar of avalanche, the drench of torrents—to these is Byron brother no less than interpreter.

Hugo's "Intellectual Autobiography."

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Since several conflicting items have appeared in print relative to my forthcoming English translation of Victor Hugo's "Postscriptum de ma vie," I should esteem it a favor if you would give space to the following brief correct statement about the book:

The work will appear in the Spring with the imprint of the Funk & Wagnalls Company. The original manuscript, written in Guernsey during the author's exile, was left with Hugo's heirs and was reserved by them for publication as a fitting memorial of the recent Victor Hugo Centenary. Being an entirely new and unpublished work of Hugo, and constituting a species of mind-biography, it evoked much interest in France, and as regards literary quality was pronounced by critics to be on a level with his best work. The subjects discussed are literature, religious science, art, great men, the French Revolution, &c. Much light is thrown upon the great writer's literary methods and processes, and his religious views, hitherto in doubt, are set forth with great frankness. A study on the last phase of Hugo's genius and embodying the results of recent Hugo criticism in France will accompany the volume. The title of the English edition will be "Victor Hugo's Intellectual Autobiography." LORENZO O'ROURKE.

"Visit."

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

In your review of Miss Laughlin's "Felicity," you say: "Worst of all is the abominable usage, never observed until a year or two ago, which makes 'visit' mean to have converse or companionship. Felicity, for example, sitting with a just reunited family, leaves them because she is sure they 'want to visit,' not to make calls, but, forsooth, to talk intimately with each other!"

This is a very common expression in the Middle West. I heard "visit" used in this sense for the first time in Illinois fifteen years ago, and have also heard it used by rural people from Ohio, Indiana, and Nebraska. I was a little surprised when a Nebraska woman told me she would be ready to "visit with me" as soon as she had finished her chores, but I soon learned that the term meant a cheerful conversation on her shady porch. If Felicity was "raised" in the Middle West she would naturally use the term. As I have heard it in Western New York also it may be a wanderer long exiled from New England.

We notice in your issue of March 23 a cablegram from "Galbraith," your London correspondent, concerning the book entitled "Whistler: Notes and Footnotes," of which we are the American publishers. TALE OF NEW ORLEANS.

THE PRICE OF SILENCE. By M. E. M. Davis. With illustrations by Griswold Tyng. Pp. 329. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

IT is very curious that an author who can write as well and with as much taste as Mrs. Davis should be so entirely lacking in artistic instinct. There is much in her book that is very charming. And along with it is much that is deplorably clumsy and grotesque. The scene of the story is laid in New Orleans. A prelude describes the search and looting by the provost guard of an aristocratic mansion during Gen. Butler's occupation of that city. Then the tale passes over the intervening years to the present time and concerns itself with the love and complications of a grandniece of the mansion's chatelaine, a son of the Union officer who commanded the looting provost guard, and young relatives and friends of the heroine. A number of their elders, survivors of the civil war, also have prominent parts in the tale and are made to describe themselves, by their talk and their actions, quite charmingly. Very pleasing also are the accounts of the fêtes and merrymakings with which the young people amuse themselves. All this is done with a distinctive touch, very graceful and engaging, which succeeds in making the life that is depicted as charming to the reader as it has appeared to the author. But when she attempts to make her story move, when she tries to use character and incident and to entwine good and evil for the purpose of evolving a story, she fails utterly. Her bad man in the guise of a gentleman would discredit even a Third Avenue melodrama. His machinations and expedients are so grotesque and flamboyant that they merely provoke a smile. And the ease with which people are imposed upon and the innocence with which they accept anybody's statement about the most vital things make one wonder whether the author really meant to imply that the modern representatives of the ancien régime in New Orleans are entirely lacking common sense.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE VIOLIN.

THE VIOLIN. Its History and Construction. Illustrated and Described from Many Sources. Together with a List of Italian and Tyrolese Violin Makers. Translated in full from the German of Abele and Niederheitman by John Broadhouse. 12mo. Pp. viii.-206. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. 75 cents.

THIS useful and very comprehensive little book is a valuable addition to the great library of books that exist on the subject of the violin. It has a brief account of the origin and derivation of the instrument, which is followed by a detailed description of the great Italian and German makers, their methods and the peculiarities of their work; also with mention of some of the more famous instruments that have come down from their hands. The acoustical experiments of Savart are discussed and the authors take occasion to emphasize the futility of departing from the models of the great makers. There is a chapter on the construction of the instrument and the making of strings, of bows, in considerable technical detail. The appendix contains a table of the names of nearly all the notable makers of Italy and the Tyrol, whose works have been preserved, giving the places of their birth, their dates and their labels. There is much information here in a very compact form. There is not much to be said for the elegance of the translation nor for the typographical appearance of the book.

IBSEN ON THE RAMPAGE.

IBSEN, THE MAN: HIS ART AND HIS SIGNIFICANCE. By Haldane MacFall. New York and San Francisco: Morgan-Shepard Company. $1.50.

THIS is the kind of book that invariably follows in the wake of a distinguished man's death. Mr. MacFall is evidently a sincere worshipper of Ibsen. He has industriously collected much that has appeared in newspapers and reviews of his idol, and with reckless speed has made an olla podrida in which there is little critical discrimination, many curious comments, and much enthusiasm. For such hot admiration, however, a multitude of critical defects may be pardoned. But we search in vain for any new light, any new reading, any fresh interpretation. Instead, we find a pasticcio of opinions culled from Brandes, Archer, Shaw, Gosse, even Max Nordau. There is, nevertheless, one absolutely unique judgment expressed by the author—who says that Ibsen "grows querulous over the finding of symbols in his plays," whatever that may mean—in his chapter devoted to "The Master Builder." He calls it a "rare poem," but not a great play. It is both. Perhaps Mr. MacFall has only read this masterpiece, and, therefore, does not realize how effective it is in performance.

With a strong cast it not only plays well, but thrills its audience. And this, too, despite its "distracting curse of symbolism"—the phrase is the author's. Furthermore, he remarks that "robbed of its symbolism" the Master Builder "becomes a futility." So would "Hamlet" and "Faust." Strip Ibsen of his symbolism and you have no longer Ibsen. We refer Mr. MacFall to Faguet and Maeterlinck, or to C. H. Herford and Dr. P. H. Wicksteed, whose lectures on Ibsen are the best commentaries ever written. We fear MacFall has read too much Shaw. The only trouble about "The Quintessence of Ibsenism" is that there is too much Shaw and too little Ibsen in the book. Shaw is a Fabian Socialist. Ibsen is an individualist. Shaw attempts to transform the Ibsen plays into Socialistic tracts; just as he attempted to turn Wagner's Siegfried into a lyric-dramatic glorification of Bakounine, the Russian Nihilist. We wonder also at the name of Nordau being included in this volume, under the head of "Some of the Best Books Upon Ibsen."

Mr. MacFall had better realize as soon as possible that Nordau is an uncritical humbug, a man who poses as a psychiatrist, who transposes criticisms from abler men's articles to attack his pet foes—vide his study of Wagner, in which he utilized the ideas of the unhappy Nietzsche. Nordau's estimate of Ibsen is, to put it mildly, pure balderdash; neither criticism nor facts. But as this MacFall book is no doubt the offering of a neophyte, and as we do not believe in quenching enthusiasm, no matter how shallow, with cold water, it may be said in conclusion that for a certain class of readers who will never study Ibsen first hand, this is the book they may read. It is written in a hop, skip, and jump style, and the pictured caricatures of Ibsen and Shaw à la William Nicholson are comical. We never knew that George Bernard smoked. The illustrator has put something that looks suspiciously like a cigarette between his lips. Or is it a high light? The best book of general biographic information concerning Ibsen and his plays is still the Jaeger biography, finished by William Morton Payne, our first American Ibsen scholar, though Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen may have been his contemporary in the hard task of persuading an unsympathetic public and hostile criticism that Ibsen was a dramatist and not a moral monster.

REPELLANT FOLKS.

THE FIRST CLAIM. By M. Hamilton. Pp. 317. 12mo. Cloth. New York: Doubleday, Page & Co. $1.50.

A SPOILED child, married too young to an elderly man quite out of her own class and harassed by an officious mother-in-law and a tyrannical course, who both combine to keep the young mother separated from her baby—so the story opens. The scene is laid in England in the present time, and the characterization shows considerable ability. There is no denying that "The First Claim" is interesting; but it is an unpleasant tale. Incidents of the most grievous sort follow one another in a sorrowful progression. From beginning to end the story is almost hopelessly distressing, and most of the people are such as would naturally be avoided. There really is not a single character for whom one can have a hearty respect and liking. There seems to be a fondness for stories which display the seamy side of life, and harrow the mind with pictures of sorrow; and so there will be plenty of readers for books like the one before us. The dialogue is natural and dramatic. It is a satisfaction, however, to be quite confident that there is not material for a play in these pages. The little girl, "Gwen," is so highly objectionable as to recall somebody's wickedly cynical toast: "To the memory of the good King Herod!"

BOSTON NOTES.

"By Right Divine"—English Classics—A Motor Car Story—Gossip About Authors.

THE title of William Sage's new story "By Right Divine," so strongly suggests a European historical novel that it may repel some readers from a book as truly American as American official personages and peculiarly American political corruption and neutralized American methods can make it, and that is to be regretted because the struggle between a selfish Senator and an upright Governor could hardly be set forth more vividly. Especially good points in the story are the subordination of the love interest to the stronger motives by which the normal man is guided, and the vivid manner in which the author shows a good woman's inevitable misunderstanding, both of essential right and of policy in matters concerning those whom she loves. That the story is original in plot after ten years of rapid production of American political novels by all sorts of writers is an unpleasant reflection on American morals. One wishes that the theme were exhausted.

***

The story is to be issued by Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. early in May. In the way of gossip about this firm's authors comes the news that Ellis Meredith has been asked to send her portrait to the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, to be placed in the section devoted to the work of women. She is selected as representing Western American writers. A pretty anecdote comes from Arizona telling of a Havasupai Indian to whom a guest at a Grand Cañon hotel shnwed the pictures in Mr. George Wharton James's "In and Around the Grand Canyon." Once and again the savage returned to look at one picture, and at last asked for it, saying that one of the girls represented in it was his dead sweetheart. The guest wrote to the publishers for it, and the poor fellow's desire was promptly granted.

***

The coming volumes of the King's Classics, which Messrs. John W. Luce & Co. are to publish, are "Wine, Women, and Song," edited by Mr. J. A. Symonds; "Royal Poets of England," edited by Mr. W. Bailey Kempling; "Utopia," edited by Mr. Robert Steele, who, having tried his hand on both classic and modern English books, and also on French classics, is now at work on an edition of Roger Bacon, of whom it is to be feared that most Americans know only the "Time is," "Time was," "Time is past" story preserved in "Gammer Gurton's Garland." Later will appear Chaucer's "Legend of Good Women," edited by Dr. Skeat, and turned into modern English; Pettie's "Petite Palace of Pettie his Pleasure," edited by Mr. Israel Gollancz, general editor of the series, and Sir William Temple's "Essay on Gardens," with which are included some other essays, all edited by Mr. Albert F. Sieveking, who has already edited two editions of Sir William's work. In this series each quaintly shaped little volume has a photogravure frontispiece and an index with an introduction and notes. One edition is half bound in boards, one in quarter vellum with cloth sides, and a small special edition will be bound in three-quarter vellum with Oxford sides, for the use of those who find the text too good for the simple, inexpensive array in which the mere lover of choice reading esteems himself fortunate to have it.

***

If every reader of English and American fiction do not regard the motor car as a necessary of life, it is not the fault of the fiction writers, for they have epdowed the machins with more faculties than it ever brought from the factory, and they bestow it npon their heroes and heroines with a lavish disregard of the probable depth of a purse and the storage capacity of a cottage of gentility. Mr. G. Sidney Paternoster is not the least among these beneficent folk, and his "The Lady of the Blue Motor," which Messrs. L. C. Page & Co. have in preparation, hrings forward five good cars and true and three good drivers, one of them a villain of the blackest dye. The heroine, although so modern that she drives her own car, is of the charming old type which lives for others, and is sweetly feminine the moment that the demand for wonderful bravery ceases. The author does not permit the reader to pluck out the heart of his mystery too soon, and the last page is the most momentous in interest.

***

The four colored pictures with which Mr. Louis Rhead has illustrated Mr. Clarence Hawkes's "Tenants of the Trees" include one charming little study of bluebirds and blue sky, and two others in wood browns and greens, one with a wonderful raccoon, the "beast like a fox" of the old explorers. Why does not some one devise a way by which pictures like these, like those which Mr. Hall makes for Mr. Roberts's books, the Mr. Bateses may be inserted into the scenes. Surely they are better adapted for the purpose than the ordinary illustrations, which are a temptation than Little Bo Peep, or that maid of Pippin Hill, beloved of the Duke of Monaghan.

***

Among the new editions brought ont by Messrs. L. C. Page & Co. are "The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam," with the five versions comparatively arranged, and twelve pictures by Miss Blanche McManus. This book is produced both in cloth and in limp leather, but the new edition of Prof. Roberts's "New York Nocturnes" appears only in the latter style, and the late Mr. Frederick Knowles's Golden Treasury of American Songs and Lyrics will be bonnd in the same fashion and in pocket form for its 1907 edition.

Mr. Ferris Greenslet, assistant editor of The Atlantic and author of the life of Lowell published last year, is making a little visit to London and Paris, but will return by the middle of next month. Miss Mary Johnston soon goes abroad for the Summer, and Mrs. Wiggin will arrive in England in time to hear that the first edition of the "New Chronicles of Rebecca," after being again and again enlarged, was at last terminated at 50,000 copies.

A second edition of the work of one less fortunate among authors who have lived in San Francisco, Miss Ina D. Coolbrith, is announced by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. The Public Library over which she presided was totally destroyed by the earthquake, and this has given her time to revise her "Songs from the Golden Gate," of which the new edition is to have illustrations by Mr. William Keith and a photogravure portrait of the author. The pleasing generosity with which most of us dispose of our neighbors' money should lead some one to draw Mr. Carnegie's attention to that library. The Pacific Coast sets Miss Coolbrith next to Bret Harte when it begins to "p'int with pride."

Miss Norah Davis, whose "The World's Warrant" is announced for next Wednesday by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., has passed through such an experience with this her second novel as has come to many an author, for she began to write one story, and her characters made another in spite of her. Miss Davis is an Alabama woman, but knows the Gulf States from Florida to the Ozarks, having traversed them now as a teacher, journalist, or Federal court reporter. She is still young enough to show the impress of her happy childhood in a houseful of books, with a sympathetic little sister, who aided her in inventing a language, now, alas! as forgotten as that which the young De Quinceys devised to conceal their thoughts from their respected elders.

In the "Humanists' Library" the Merrymount Press is bringing out the "Against War" of Erasmus, edited by Mr. J. M. Mackail, Professor of Poetry at Oxford and son-in-law of the late Sir Edwin Burne-Jones. It will be remembered that the books of this library are printed in "Monbalegro" type, designed by Mr. Herbert P. Horne for the Merrymount Press, with title pages and initial letters from his hand. The editions are limited to 303 copies, of which 275 are sold.

STEPHENSON BROWNE.

Boston, April 12, 1907.

GUNTER'S LAST WORK.

MR. BARNES, AMERICAN. A Sequel to Mr. Barnes of New York. By Archibald Clavering Gunter. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.

THIS book, the last novel of Mr. Gunter, who died only a few weeks ago, contains a mass of exciting and almost bewildering adventures. It is the sort of book that one picks up at midnight and reads and reads avidiouely until he is surprised to find that it is almost time for his morning bath. The incidents are piled up on one another with the rapidity and ingenuity of a Charles Reade. The characters haven't time to turn round and draw breath before the bad men are at it again and the heat of the fray becomes hotter than ever.

This, in short, is the story of a modern Corsican vendetta—and Corsican perseverance has evidently not become modernized or in any degree altered from the days of old. Edwin, the particular chum of Mr. Barnes, has married a beautiful Corsican; and this connection, together with the violent death of a relative, brings on the blood-feud, in which Barnes and his betrothed are also involved. The Corsican on vengeance bent is unfortunately rich and follows them to France, whence they wisely endeavor to escape to England immediately after the wedding. A detective is employed to help baffle the Corsicans—and "things are doing" from that moment until the final word of the story.

Barnes, it will be remembered, is the most wonderful pistol-shot ever imagined—a man whose Colts is almost superior to the Hawkens rifle of Cooper. In the end, when the Corsican is about to murder Edwin and assault his bride, Mr. Barnes, worn and weary, supposes the other side at a marvelous distance with his first shot. He then kills villain No. 2, the accomplice, in similar short order. Then, just as Edwin and the detective are released from the tower where they have been imprisoned, the lighted fuse takes effect and the old building is blown into a thousand million pieces. Mr. Barnes, American, has turned the tables even on Corsica.

THE CONCORDANCE SOCIETY.

THE Concordance Society, originating in a suggestion made by Prof. George Herbert Palmer of Harvard, was organized Dec. 28 during the session of the Modern Language Association at New Haven, with the following officers: President—Albert E. Cook, Yale University; Secretary—Charles G. Osgood, Jr., Princeton University; Treasurer—Curtis H. Page, Columbia University; Executive Committee—The officers of the society, with Charles M. Hodell, Woman's College, Baltimore, and Albert H. Tolman, University of Chicago.

The purposes of the society are "to provide subventions toward the publication of such concordances and word indexes to English writers as shall be considered sufficiently meritorious and necessary; to formulate plans for the compilation of such works, and to assist intending compilers of such works with suggestion and advice." Members pay $5 a year, due May 1. As the society will disband if a hundred members are not secured by May 1, applications for membership are desired, and may be sent to any one of the officers.

The society now has about seventy members, including such well-known names as Profs. William James, George L. Kittredge, and Berrett Wendell, at Harvard; Charlton M. Lewis, Wilbur L. Cross, and William L. Phelps, at Yale; Henry Van Dyke and Theodore W. Hunt, at Princeton, and Caleb T. Winchester, at Wesleyan.

LOVE IN IRELAND.

THE STORY OF BAWN. By Katherine Tynan, author of "The Dear Irish Girl," "Julia," "Dick Pentreath," &c. Pp. 312. Imported by A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

KATHERINE TYNAN is well known for her pretty and pleasantly-told tales of Irish life, and this "Story of Bawn," hnt adde another to the list. The heroine, Bawn Devereux, herself tells the story of her life, dwelling mainly upon the events of the last year or two of her teens, when misfortunes thickened and threatened over the heads of her grandparents, the lord and lady of an ancestral estate in Ireland, with whom she had always lived. The waves of advancing ill-fortune are about to sweep away the old people and only her sacrifice of herself in a marriage with a man whom she loathes can save them. She is about to make it when deliverance comes out of a midnight storm in the shape of an uncle who had disappeared years before and who clears up all the old stories about himself, which hed made the old people miserable and had brought upon them all their misfortunes. Soon follows the young woman's own true love and all the characters in the story are properly paired off and married. It is a slight little tale of the sort to amuse one's self with for an hour on a lazy Summer afternoon and forget the next day. But it is told with taste and with some skill in the handling of incident and with much evident affection for the quiet life, the beautiful fields, and the contented people of secluded corners of Ireland.

NEMESIS OF NATIONS.

A NOTEWORTHY study of history from the pen of W. R. Paterson, M. A., known also hy the pseudonym of Benjamin Swift, will appear next week with the imprint of Messrs. E. P. Dutton & Co. Under the title "The Nemesis of Nations" the author has made a humanistic study of history with an analysis and a comparison of the decadent influences in nations. The biggest factor that he separates, slavery, may be set down as the author's theme. Although he may show a specious argument, he has given a valuable survey of facts as well as a general argument. The volume includes an introduction and chapters on Hindustan, Bahylon, Greece, and Rome. Another volume is hoped for later. The present work has been well received in England.

THE "GRAFTON PORTRAIT."

THE claim of the so-called "Grafton Portrait of Shakespeare," recently discovered in England, was supposedly supported by Mr. H. Spielmann, editor of the Magazine of Art and well-known critic. Argument over it has been waxing hot. The rustic family of ancient descent, in whose house the portrait was "discovered," called it "Uncle Gus," or something like that, and "Uncle Gus" it is to remain, with the loss to the world of another potential treasure. For the case of the portrait has been lost by Mr. Spielmann denying that he indorsed it, and his supposed opinion that the portrait is a fake. Mr. Spielmann will write about it for the next issue of Pall Mall Magazine.

HARPERS BOOKS

The Cruise of the "Shining Light"

By Norman Duncan

A story of love and mystery, of childhood and manhood, of humor and pathos. A story one cannot forget—the sort of book that can be read aloud. The people of the book are real people—the boy Dannie, old Nick Top who brings the boy up to be a gentleman after the rules of Lord Chesterfield, and the girl Judith whom Dannie loves from childhood.

A novel full of the same fine manly religious feeling which marked the author's earlier success Dr. Luke of the Labrador. A story that holds one as the great old-time novels hold and demands more than a single reading.

The Mystics

By Katherine Cecil Thurston

Scene follows scene with the same persistent excitement and breathless fascination which marked Mrs. Thurston's former novel The Masquerader. A story of romance and mystery, in which the hero at the peril of life and all boldly choses to play the lover's part.

The Princess

A plot so startling that it at once chains the attention. A daring and orignal novel of love and intrigue in the court-life of Russia.

The Giant's Strength

By Basil King

This is a big, strong novel of to-day—the day of giant monopolies and vast fortunes—in which hearts and wills clash in situations new to fiction.

Nature's Craftsmen

By Dr. Henry C. McCook

A marvellous account of the picturesque and unusual sides in the life of ants, bees, ballooning spiders, and other insects. It points out unsuspected wonders at our very doors, and is wholly free from technical terms.

TALKS WITH WRITERS OF BOOKS.

The Varied Occupations of Mr. Frederick J. Stimson—Margaret Deland and "Old Chester Tales"—Ford Madox Heuffer and the Rossettis.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS by OTIS NOTMAN.

FREDERICK J. STIMSON came on from Boston to spend a few days in this city, which afforded me the opportunity of having a chat with him. He, like other Bostonians, finds the life here very strenuous, and protested that they make him work too hard and keep him hustling too much for him really to enjoy himself. To me Mr. Stimson represents not a dual but a triple personality. In one personality he is a Harvard professor, in another a practicing lawyer, and in a third a writer of romance and fiction.

Before Mr. Stimson left college he had written his first novel, "Guerndale," which he signed "J. S. of Dale." But he decided then that his interest in public affairs attracted him to try law, while his duty to his family required a more money making profession than the writing of novels not made to sell. For thirty years he has been active in politics, and is a member of both the New York and Massachusetts bar, and was at one time Assistant Attorney General in the latter State. He has numbered among his clients the United States Government, the Bank of England, and the State of Massachusetts, a curious record for a man not avowedly of large practice. He has an office now in the lawyers' section of Boston, and is still hard at work. He has written a number of law books, in fact has two coming out this year. One "The Law of the Constitutions, National and State," the other a new edition of his handbook to the labor law of the United States.

In his capacity as professor he lectures at Harvard College on Comparative Legislation and Constitutional Limitations. He gives four or five lectures every week. Next Fall he is also to give a course of lectures at the Lowell Institute, with the striking title "The Federal Powers, the Rights of the States, the Liberties of the People."

Mr. Stimson appears in his third rôle as a writer of fiction. He takes a good vacation, and when attending to railroad practice in his private car, or on his annual voyage to England, he writes his novels. At first he wrote under a pen name, that of J. S. of Dale, but his later books have been under his own name. His last novel is entitled "In Cure of Her Soul." Mr. Stimson says: "There are two sorts of fiction that I am interested in writing, and they are each quite distinct—the romance and the novel. The latter the novel that deals with the present day problems, what the French call 'roman de moeurs,' not the dialect story, the tale of provincial life, for, to tell the truth, I am much more interested in writing about those people who are in the lead, who shape our American life, who are found in New York or Washington, rather than about the people who live in rural New England or in the backwoods. Mrs. Deland and Miss Wilkins can do that sort of thing far better than I can—indeed except in 'Baron of Sandwich,' I have never risked it—no, frankly, I like to study people who are not peculiar, but representative. When I say I want to write about the upper class, I mean, of course, not money, but the class that have brains and ability and power, which really shapes our world. My writing is my recreation and my pleasure, and I keep it quite apart from my law work. I never do any fiction writing while the courts are open. I write during the Summer."

There are really four different occupations in which Mr. Stimson is vitally interested, his law, his professorship, his writing, and his politics. In 1902 he ran as one of the Democratic candidates for Congress, and he it was who wrote the Massachusetts Democratic platform of 1903. Also for four years he was Consul to the United States Industrial Commission at Washington, and was chosen to draw the present corporation code of Massachusetts. How Mr. Stimson accomplishes all he does, I fail to understand. I fancy he does not get the long vacation he says he likes to have. Certainly it is true that between the publication of his last two stories there have been ten years. But he says: "With my fiction, I only write when I feel like it, and when I have something to say. The present condition of the American market, for serious work, is not such as to encourage an author in the hope of earning his living. Exceptions like 'The House of Mirth' but prove the rule. Best sellers are nearly always trash. In France they understand this. The classic writers, like Bourget, in France, aim avowedly at the public of 'le quinzième mille'—not that of the hundred and fifty thousand."

Finally, Mr. Stimson told me he had two masters—for novels, Balzac—for romance, Tourgenieff.

***

I HAVE not yet asked Mrs. Margaret Deland for a personal interview, as I have not been anywhere near where she lives, but I gathered these interesting facts about her from her publishers. She began her literary work in this way: Some years ago a friend discovered on the leaves of her market book some lines in verse, and the friend encouraged her to continue her efforts at literary expression. Mrs. Deland did so, but found that it was prose and not poetry that was her natural beat, and as a result wrote her "Old Chester Tales." As a matter of fact she really began her career as an artist instead of as an author.

After being educated at one of the best schools for girls in Pennsylvania she came to New York City and studied drawing and designing at the Cooper Institute. She graduated at the head of her class, and her ability was so marked that she was promptly asked to take the place of instructor in design at the Girls' Normal College in this city.

She accepted the offer, and it was while holding this position that she met her future husband, Lorin F. Deland. They were married in 1880, and since then their home has been in Boston.

Mrs. Deland's method of work is a very systematic one. She has many social duties and realizes that without method she could achieve no results, and she makes a habit of spending so much time regularly at her desk. Her favorite workroom is a large and many windowed one on the second floor of her attractive house in Boston. She writes her first draft of a scene or a chapter in the first flush of inspiration. Then she rewrites this with great care, making alterations. Next it is typewritten by her secretary for her publishers. Later she corrects and recorrects the printed proofs.

Mrs. Deland does not often visit the once charming town in Western Pennsylvania which she christened Old Chester, probably because its attraction is somewhat destroyed by the encroachment of a neighboring city.

She was born near the town which she has immortalized. "Old Chester," of course, is not its real name; nor is it the old town of Chester near Philadelphia, but it is near the City of Pittsburg. To her readers "Old Chester" is a very real place, but every one does not take it with the literalness of a man who wrote to her in regard to getting a farm there and said:

"I have read your books with interest, not only on account of their being written in an old-fashioned manner, but because I am looking for a farm, and am much taken with the idea of having one in Old Chester.

"Would you mind telling me whether you would advise the purchase of farm land there as a means of earning a living? I have had no previous experience in farming, but am obliged to take up something of the kind on account of nerve trouble."

Mrs. Deland had some trouble in getting the title for her new book. She wanted to call it simply "The Awakening," and that was the title under which it began to appear serially, but shortly after it began to run a book was issued bearing that title, and so, according to the rules of etiquette in the literary world, she was obliged to change the name to "The Awakening of Helena Richie." This new book of Mrs. Deland's has afforded various ministers in Boston texts for their sermons. They do not all agree on the point that Dr. Lavendar's method of bringing the dramatic complication to a final happy end was the best possible from the ethical standpoint, but they all find a great lesson in it.

Mrs. Deland was much touched that "Helena Richie" is to be published in raised letters for the use of the blind. There are comparatively few books used for this kind of publication. By the way, her real name is "Margaret Wade Deland," but she prefers to sign her work "Margaret Deland."

MAY ISABEL FISK is a young woman of many accomplishments. She is not alone familiar to the public through her short stories and humorous monologues, but also as playwright and actress. It is for her monologues, however, that she is best known. Every now and then these sketches are culled from the various magazines in which they have made their initial appearance and are issued in book form. "Monologues" was published a year or so ago, and the second volume of these sketches will be produced in May.

It has been Mrs. Fisk's custom to give an annual recital at the Waldorf, on which occasion she exploits her latest monologues, ranging from the silly young bride making her first call on the butcher to the vitriol-tongued, sharp-witted, impudent shop girl. Mark Twain has included her "Women in the Shoe Shop" in his library of American humor. Mrs. Fisk's publishers are anxious to have her confine her efforts entirely to the humorous vein, but recently she has made a departure by collaborating with Mr. Herbert Kaufman in writing the romantic novel, "The Stolen Throne." Another novel will be forthcoming from this dual pen before the end of the year.

I inquired of Mrs. Fisk what it was that suggested to her the idea of writing monologues. She replied, "I simply couldn't help it; I couldn't laugh alone. Women are so funny because they take trivial things so seriously and because they are so unconsciously humorous. All my material is taken from life, everyday life, and frequently I do not go beyond my own threshold for copy. I just stand off and watch and listen to myself, and pretty soon something absurd is sure to happen. The other day, thinking to please the captious palate of one of my household, I demanded of my grocer "turnips." He inquired whether I wanted white or yellow turnips. I replied, "I want mashed turnips."

I hadn't the least thought of being amusing when I said it.

The idea for the monologues suggested itself to me one night at the opera. Our seats were in the balcony, and so far around on the side that none of the stage was visible. It was "Siegfried." All I could see was the little door on the side of the stage, the man with the trombone, and the smoke coming from the dragon's mouth. By this time I was very cross about it, until suddenly I was overcome with the absurdity of the situation. I borrowed a pencil from the usher and commenced making notes on my programme.

"What is your new book of monologues called?" I asked.

"'The Talking Woman,'" was the reply. "It was rather amusing the way it came to be so named. I was discussing with my publishers the details of the book and my inability so far to find a sufficiently good title. Suddenly the editor with whom I was talking snapped his finger and exclaimed, "I have it! 'The Talking Woman!'"

Of course I pretended to be frightfully offended, and the editor endeavored to assure me that he had thought of the title hours before I arrived, but I knew very well that I had suggested the idea—The Talking Woman.

"You give your own monologues, do you not?"

"I found I had a little knack of delineating the women I wrote about. In fact, so much is lost in the mere reading that I frequently depend on the innuendo of gesture or of a facial expression to convey an entire idea at least to an American audience."

"Do you find your London audiences much slower to grasp a point?"

"Well, on one occasion, at a garden party where I had been appearing, the hostess approached me after what I had thought to be my most screaming effort.

"'Very nice, my dear, very nice indeed. Now do give us one of your funny ones.'

"One of my most interesting experiences was last Spring at Lady Moreton's Grosvenor Square, when I appeared with Coquelin, (aine.) I as the exponent of American monologues and he the French.

"You have no regular time for work?"

"Oh, dear no! I am deplorably lacking in method. That is why I could never imbibe Methodism. I never take my work any more seriously than I trust my readers do. Of course, novel writing involves real labor."

"Do you and Mr. Kaufman always agree on the way things should be written?"

"Always, as Mr. Kaufman's work is always subject to criticism and change, while my own part I insist shall remain as I write it. It is a simple and agreeable arrangement."

Herbert Kaufman is a young man still in his early thirties, but he has all ready done so much that it was difficult for me to keep track of the list of his activities. When I met Mr. Kaufman he had just returned from spending the morning with William T. Stead, with whom he is associated in several enterprises and whose American affairs are under Mr. Kaufman's direction. Mr. Kaufman is a journalist of wide experience, both in America and Europe. For many years he was identified with newspaper publishing in Washington and for some while occupied the post of American adviser for C. Arthur Pearson of London, publisher of many magazines, which office he has just relinquished in order to devote more time to a new magazine, in the publication of which he has just associated himself. The first number of that magazine he expects will appear in the Fall. What with the details of the new magazine and The Review of Reviews' Encyclopaedia, in the production of which he is occupying an important part, it is a marvel how he finds time to devote to the completion of the two novels upon which he is now engaged, one in collaboration with Mrs. Fisk, the other as an independent novel. Mr. Kaufman has traveled much and seen much. He has divided his time in recent years between London and New York. This year a volume of poems from his pen will make its appearance. It will be a book of a somewhat revolutionary strain, and the manuscript is now in the hands of his publishers.

Talks With Writers of Books.

"The Stolen Throne," which he has written in collaboration with Mrs. Fisk, has already proved a great success, a considerable first edition having been exhausted long before the date of publication.

FORD MADOX HEUFFER, who is to have a book out this month entitled "England and the English," an interpretation, is a young writer, half English and half German, whose personal history is of more than ordinary interest. His mother was a daughter of Ford Madox Browne, and his Aunt Lucy, his mother's sister, married William Michael Rossetti, so that all through his youth Mr. Heuffer was in the very closest relations with the Rossetti family, and with the entire personnel of the literary and artistic movement which found its centre in the salon of his grandfather, Madox Browne. There was hardly a celebrity of those times that Mr. Heuffer did not meet. At his earliest infant's appearance at a musical soiree he was held in Queen Victoria's lap, while Rubinstein played. On another occasion Liszt, whose fierce countenance had made an impression almost of terror upon the boy's mind, having refused to play at the urgent solicitation of his host and the guests, suddenly noticed the child, and placed his hand upon his head and said: "I will play for you, then you can say you have heard the great Liszt play."

Of all the famous musicians whom Mr. Heuffer met, he says the most attractive personally was Brahms.

O'Shaughnessy was another memory of those early days, and Mr. Heuffer can recall the impression of effective brilliancy which he received in hearing that gifted, but early doomed, poet talk in his grandfather's drawing room. Philip Burke Marston, the blind poet, and James Thompson of B. V., author of the poem "The City of the Dreadful Night," completed the trio of poets of that day who showed so much promise, which promise was soon dispelled by the fate which seemed to hang over all three of them. Mr. Heuffer well remembers the dark and gloomy circumstances which surrounded the death of Thompson, circumstances calculated to have a lasting effect upon the mind of the imaginative boy.

His recollections of the Rossetti family and of the people that surrounded them, including the Morrises and Swinburne and others more or less allied to the group, are particularly full and vivid. He grew up with the children of William Rossetti, who were his cousins. The young Rossettis were ardent anarchists, and carried on a propaganda, even publishing a paper in the basement of their father's house. Heuffer adds, however, that "this enthusiasm was not lasting, and my cousins have grown up into normal members of society." Mr. Heuffer's father was a German, a native of Münster. Many of the relatives still live there, so that Mr. Heuffer's associations have been nearly as much German as English. It is because of this fact, perhaps, that in his new work on England he has approached that country with something of the dispassionate mood of the outsider.

At present Mr. Heuffer lives in an out-of-the-way corner of Sussex. He has inherited an estate there and several houses, one of which is occupied by Joseph Conrad. All his literary associations are English, and he forms one of a notable group of writers. His close neighbors are Henry James and H. G. Wells. Kipling lives only a little distance away. His relations with the first three named men are of the very closest, and they have, indeed, markedly affected his literary career, for he is not only the friend, but the literary co-worker and collaborator of Conrad. Mr. Heuffer, in the capacity of reader for a prominent London publishing house, received Conrad's first book, so he can claim no small share in the discovery of that writer. His name figures on the title page with Conrad in the book entitled "Romance." Mr. Heuffer is writing a trilogy on the history of the unfortunate Katharine Howard, the "Fifth Queen." As yet he has only completed the first novel. In addition to this he has also written a biography of his grandfather, Ford Madox Browne, and a number of other works, in fiction and belles lettres, besides much verse. He is altogether an admirable representative of the younger generation of men of letters in England.

The Circulation Department of the New York Public Library reports the following books as those most in demand during the week ended April 9: Adult Fiction—Chambers's "Fighting Chance," Nicholson's "Port of Missing Men," Mason's "Running Water." Juvenile Fiction—Alcott's "Little Women," Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin," Burnett's "Sara Crewe." New Fiction—Ibsen's Plays, Van Dyke's "Studies in Pictures," Hill's "Fighting a Fire."

LOVE AND ART.

THE ISLE OF DREAMS. By Myra Kelley, author of "Little Citizens." Pp. 215. D. Appleton & Co. $1.25.

MYRA KELLEY'S delightful stories of east side school children have justly earned for her a large and sympathetic audience which will welcome her first venture as a novelist. But her admirers will be disappointed to find that she does not handle this new medium with the skill that she showed in her use of the short story. Her central idea is fresh and interesting, but it is not enough to make a novel out of, unless it were in the hands of a master artist. Consequently she has had to pad it out with irrelevant incidents and much dilution of the narrative. She could have made out of her material a bright, original, and taking short story, but she has been ill-advised to make her entrance among the novelists with an offering of so little substance as to story and of so few attractions in the telling.

The heroine of the story is a young woman artist who has already won some fame and fortune and is believed by herself and her friends to be on the high road to much greater success. At a country house, whither she had gone as a week-end guest, she finds that it is her host who has been buying all her paintings. Deeply wounded and humiliated by the discovery that her Public is represented by only one man, and that it has been solely upon the money of this would-be lover that she has worked and studied and dressed and played, she rushes home and off to Europe without giving him a chance to make his explanations. She stays away for a year, works hard, and wins some real fame in the shape of a Salon medal, and while she is gone her admirer makes chivalric amends. And, of course, she comes back.

Myra Kelley has deserted the teacher's desk. But why should she consider that that gives her the right to play pranks with the English language? She needs to chasten her spirit with regard to the essentials of sentence structure as observed by the best writers of English and made necessary by a due regard for lucidity. Her worst fault in this respect, especially noticeable in the first half of the book, is a habit of trailing along without a stop from one idea to another until she finally brings up at a period, bewilderingly distant from her starting point. Her practice of chopping off phrases and relative clauses and setting them up as separate sentences—into a sort of bachelor maid housekeeping—is one that is deplorably prevalent among young writers. They seem to think that it leads piquancy and sprightliness to their style. Time was when such lapses from English undefiled were remedied, if they existed at all, during the transformation from manuscript into book.

SOCIAL STUDIES.

THE NEXT STREET BUT ONE. By M. Loana. New York: Longmans, Green & Co.

THIS book, mainly about the poor who are always with us and may be supposed to live in the next street but one, is the work of a trained nurse, formerly ward sister of a hospital and a district nurse, as we learn from casual references to her own labors and experiences. The book is a collection of studies on family and economic conditions; but each chapter contains such a wonderful variety of personal illustrations and is so entertainingly written that the analytic side of the exposition is lost in the pleasure of perusal. The conclusions and deductions, however, are only the more convincing, as they are drawn from specific incidents rather than from long arrays of figures and statistics.

The author, in addition to apparently unlimited experience, possesses a good, active style, and that most saving of all graces, especially when treating of the poor and their sufferings—a sense of humor that may be used either as a kindly shield or a satire weapon of offensive warfare. She understands the poor and the rich—the poor as they seem to the rich and the rich as they seem to the poor. She points out the qualities in which the poor are superior in frankness and kindness—and those in which they are inferior.

One is tempted to wish—that every one might read the chapter on "Other People's Business." This is a chapter which treats of charity organised and disorganised. She points out the cowardice of people who refuse to interfere in other people's business, even when it is a question of stopping gross cruelty, and she shows the absurd manner in which much of the essential work is delegated to incompetents.

"The numerous societies for inducing other people to do our duty to our neighbor, and counting up how often they have done it, have a very ludicrous side to their performances," says the author. Then she tells how the members of a certain Kind Action Society held many teas over the question of an old Frenchwoman who lived in the poor part of town and never heard a word of her native language. When one member was finally delegated to go and talk French she discovered that the old woman was living with her daughter, and that the only reason she never heard the language was that she was stone deaf! The chapter closes with the remark of a lady who said: "Suppose we form a society for not belonging to any society."

The more data contained in this work is wonderful. The method of chatty and sympathetic treatment is even more to be admired. It is the work of one who has lived widely—seen, heard, and remembered.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

IN THE DAYS OF GOLDSMITH. By Tudor Jenks, author of "In the Days of Chaucer," "In the Days of Shakespeare," "In the Days of Milton," "In the Days of Scott," &c. Pp. 275. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co. $1.

MR. JENKS approaches his subject in a spirit so intensely sympathetic that it becomes controversial. One after another he takes up the events of Goldsmith's life or the phases of his character which have been condemned by other biographers, and with generous heat declares that the Irish author has been maligned and deserves praise rather than blame. In his ardent advocacy he even finds an episode of the young man's college career when with a company of students he attempted to break open the city prison in revenge for the arrest of a companion, "rather creditable than otherwise." His objections to many of the strictures of other biographers are well founded in a reasonable interpretation of the subject's life, and his conclusions show the author of "The Vicar of Wakefield" in a more humane and lovable light than do Forster and others. But his arguments and decisions are not always marked by judicial temper and sweet reasonableness.

For the general reader the scheme upon which the book is laid out is excellent. Mr. Jenks does not attempt to go into overmuch detail in recounting his subject's life. His effort is rather to give a rapid moving picture of the man's development from childhood and of his years of struggle and final success. And this he projects against a background of the chief events of the time in England, upon the Continent, and in America. Each era in Goldsmith's life is thus shown with its attendant contemporary happenings, and the reader never loses his sense of the influences and the inter-relations of the man and the rest of the world. This is especially of value in the chapters devoted to the writing of Goldsmith's most important works. An appendix carries out this idea still further by arranging in tables of parallel columns the dates of the events in Goldsmith's life, world events, and notable literary events of the same date. There are also a very full index and a short bibliography devoted chiefly to biographies.

A "PSYCHOMETRICAL" WORK.

A BOOK which is certain to create a genuine sensation of a wholesome kind in the circle of those interested in psychical research will soon be ready for the press. It is autobiographic in nature and reviews the more striking psychical experiences of a lady of known mental gifts and personal character. These experiences are of the kind which have been called by Dr. James Rhodes Buchanan "psychometrical." The book will probably appear anonymously, but with an introduction by a widely and well esteemed New York rector, certifying the personal character of the teller of the strange tales from a land as yet scientifically unexplored.

NEW BENSON ESSAYS.

ARTHUR C. BENSON, who has taken permanent rank in letters through his essays, including "The Upton Letters" and "From a College Window," comes before us the first of next week with a welcome new volume—"Beside Still Waters" (Putnam). In this he records the sentiments and the changing opinions, and describes the quiet course of life of a young man whom an unexpected legacy has freed from the necessity of leading an active life in the world of affairs.

The Imprint.

The Imprint is the title of a little periodical, beautifully illustrated, which is published by the American Bank Note Company. The color work is admirable, and a part of the first cover design is an excellent example of what is called geometrical lathe work, a kind of engraving used for bank notes, which cannot be counterfeited.

QUERIES.

TO secure attention in this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large, and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must be prepared to await their turn.

B. H. R.—I wish to ask some one to tell me why the cat does not figure in the Bible? If the Hebrews lived in Egypt they must have seen a cat or two. Were they "taboo"? I see many books about "The Cat," and have sought in vain for some explanation of this silence.

The cat is not mentioned in the Protestant Bible, nor in the Old Testament of the Jews, but is mentioned in the Roman Catholic Bible. In other words, the Book of Baruch, wherein the cat figures, is regarded by Protestants and Jews as an apocryphal work, whereas the Roman Catholics regard it as deutero-canonical, or a book of Scripture taken into the canon after the rest. The reference to the cat is in the sixth chapter, twenty-second verse of the Book of Baruch: "Upon their bodies and heads sit bats, swallows, and birds, and the cats also."

Baruch, Hebrew for "the blessed," was the son of Neriah and friend and secretary of the prophet Jeremiah, whom he accompanied to Egypt. In that country the cat was treated as a divinity. It must have been well known to the Hebrews. Baruch notices it only as frequenting Pagan temples, presumably to destroy vermin, attracted by the fragments of animal and vegetable offerings to the idols. It may be that the Hebrews deemed the animal unclean and therefore did not mention it. This, however, is an unsatisfactory explanation. The cat, it is said, is now more common in Bible lands than in the West, yet no trace of its name is found in the classical authors except in connection with Egypt. The passage from Baruch refers to the vanity of the Babylonish idols, and it is thought that perhaps the people of Babylon originally procured the cat from Egypt. The Jewish Encyclopedia says: "There is no reference to the cat in the Old Testament, the domestication of that animal belog later than the Bible except in Egypt."

C. L. E.—Before me lies a pamphlet with title page as follows: "An elegy on the late Rev. George Whitefield, M. A., who died Sept. 30, 1770, in the fifty-sixth year of his age. By Charles Wesley, M. A., Presbyter of the Church of England. Bristol: Printed by William Pine. MDCCLXXI. Price, sixpence." Octavo. 20 pp., including title page; last page blank."

Title page is inclosed in very heavy black lines one-eighth of an inch wide, with like lines across, above, and below the author's name.

It is in perfect condition, title page a little dust soiled, on heavy old paper. Was once bound in a volume with other pamphlets, and has cut edges, but not close trimmed. Is 8x5 inches.

Do you know of any record price of it, or of its probable value now?

Touching the same event—namely, the death of Whitefield—there are before me three other pamphlets of like form and date, the first a sermon by the Rev. John Wesley. Pp. 32. London. Printed 1770. Another, "Some Elegiac Lines," by the Rev. Mr. De Courcey. London, 1771. Another, "A Sermon by Ebenezer Pemberton, D. D." To which is added an elegiac poem on his death, by Phillis, a negro girl, &c. Boston. Printed, London reprinted 1771. The title pages of all these three, in particular of the second and the last, are very much crowded with particulars.

We find no recorded sale in this country of any of these works.

Charles Wesley's elegy of George Whitefield is interesting to collectors of items relating to Wesley, and a fair price may be obtained for this book or pamphlet.

John Wesley preached a sermon on "Preservative Against Unsettled Notions in Religion," and this was published in 12mo in 1770. It seems to have no especial value.

Richard De Courcey was Vicar of St. Aldmond. His writings have very small value.

There were two Ebenezer Pembertons, father and son. The elder was a minister of Old South Church, Boston. The son was the first man to receive the degree of D. D. from Princeton. He was a Tory in the Revolution. He was pastor of the Brick Church in Boston, which was closed in 1775. As he did not die until Sept. 9, 1779, Phillis, the negro girl, could not have written an elegiac poem on his death in 1771. This pamphlet probably has value, as a sermon delivered by him at the ordination of David Brainard, 1744, fetches from $9 to $12 at auction, and another preached at the ordination of Walter Wilmot at Jamaica, L. I., in 1738, brings $3 or more.

BRYANT WILLARD.—Where did you dig up the "J." in Lever's name? He never signed any of his prefaces or introductions that way that I've been able to discover.

There is an abundance of authority for the "J." Thomas's Biographical Dictionary, the Century Dictionary of Names, the American Encyclopedia, Nelson's Encyclopedia, and the United States catalogue of books all give the author's name as Charles James Lever, and so do also the Dictionary of National Biography and Allibone's Dictionary of Authors, the last two being generally considered the best of authorities.

R. LEVINS.—Will you be good enough to give me a list of books to read following a visit to Ireland, Scotland, and England, particularly some good books on Ireland?

It is presumed that descriptive books only are sought. Such are J. N. Brewer's "Beauties of Ireland," Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Hall's "Ireland," Britton and Brayley's "Beauties of England and Wales," Dibdin's "Tour of the Northern English Counties," E. Finden's "Ports, Harbors, Watering Places, and Picturesque Scenery of Great Britain." N. Hawthorne's "Our Old Home" and "Passages from English Note-Books," W. Howitt's "Rural Life in England," W. Beattie's "Scotland Illustrated," J. F. Hunnewell's "Land of Scott," and C. Sinclair's "Scotland and the Scotch." These, of course, are only a very few of the books about these countries. There are also many interesting town and county histories.

Mrs. J. E. W.—Will you kindly let me know through your paper the value, if there be any, of "The History of the Revolutions of Portugal," by M. l'Abbe de Vertot, printed in 1754?

Abbé René Aubert de Vertot d'Auboeuf published his "Histoire des revolutions de Portugal" in 1689. The 1754 English translation of this work seems to have no especial value.

E. S. D.—Will you kindly let me know if the copies of the "Century Magazine," 1883, containing "The Bread Winners," published anonymously, possess any value other than that of old magazines?

"The Breadwinners" in this form is valued at from $1 to $2.

INQUIRER.—Can you tell me where I may find a full report of addresses delivered in the Brooklyn Academy of Music at Henry Ward Beecher's seventieth birthday anniversary?

The Brooklyn Evening newspapers published reports of these addresses in full or nearly so.

J. IRVING CLARKE.—Some time ago, I think, you published in THE NEW YORK TIMES a short article about Edmund Vance Cooke. Can you tell me where I can procure any of his writings? I especially want to get the poem beginning "This life's a hollow bubble, don't you know." That is the only thing that I ever read of his, and if he has written anything else as good I want to get it, too.

Mr. Cooke is the author of "Rimes to be Read," "Chronicles of the Little Tot," "How Did You Die?" "Biography of Our Baby," and "Told to the Little Tot," published by the Dodge Publishing Company, 42 East Nineteenth Street, New York, and "Impertinent Poems," by Forbes & Co. of Boston.

WALTER A. PHILLIPS.—Years ago when I was a boy in London, England, I read a novel entitled "The London Apprentice," by Pierce Egan. (Am not sure of title and author's name.) The plot of the story is laid in London during the reign of Henry VIII. Do you know whether the book is to existence, and whether it can be procured in this city?

Pierce Egan's novels were published in this city in 1880 by Robert M. De Witt, then at 33 Rose Street, and by Dick & Fitzgerald of 18 Ann Street. Among those published by De Witt was "The London Apprentice and the Goldsmith's Daughter." This is probably the book you seek. De Witt's business was taken over by R. H. Russell, 3 West Twenty-ninth Street, and inquiry there might result in finding the book if it is in print, or Dick & Fitzgerald may have it.

W. W.—Is there any value attached to a full set of the "Philistine Magazine" bound? Are the first fifteen volomes rare? Who is the proprietor of the magazine?

A set of the first eleven volumes of The Philistine has fetched $29.70 at auction, and a presentation copy to Augustin Daly, same number of volumes, has brought as high as $34.88. Elbert Hubbard (pseudonym "Fra Elbertus") publishes and edits this magazine at East Aurora, N. Y.

F. H. G.—Can I ascertain through your columns the years of Aristomachus of Soli and Philiscus of Thrace (Agrius)? Were they contemporaries of Aristotle, or did they come before him?

Aristomachus of Soli lived about 300 B. C. Aristotle died, aged 62, about 322 B. C. Philiscus, a pupil of Diogenes the Cynic, was, like Aristotle, a tutor of Alexander the Great.

M. T.—Will you kindly inform me through your columns where Thomas Hardy now lives and give me as much of his history as you conveniently can to limited space?

Thomas Hardy was born in Dorsetshire on June 2, 1840. He was educated in the local school and received private tuition in Latin and French, and in the evening classes at King's College. Articled to an ecclesiastical architect in 1856, he measured and sketched many old country churches which have since been demolished or altered. He worked at Gothic architecture under Sir A. Blomfield, and was prizeman of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1863 and of the Architectural Association the same year. His advent in literature began by verse writing, but he soon relinquished poetry for prose. His home is at Dorchester, England.

C. C. C.—Will you kindly tell me the value of Bailey's Dictionary, in two volumes, published in London in 1726 and 1727 respectively, and in good preservation?

The market value is from $2.50 to $3 for the two volumes.

Answers from Readers.

E. C. C.—The name of the author of the poem, "The Wander Thirst," asked for by W. P. B., is Gerald Gould.

JEAN JENNINGS.—In answer to your correspondent, "A. M.," inquiry regarding the book, "The Rights of Women," I wish to say Mary Wollstonecraft, in 1792, wrote "A Vindication of the Rights of Woman." She was the pioneer on the road which Susan B. Anthony so bravely followed.

JAMES MOTT.—I have a copy before me of "The History of the Seravites," to which there is a reference in your issue of March 30. The two parts are bound together in a very small 12mo. Following the title page to the first part is "The Publisher to the Reader," covering nineteen pages, which you state is lacking in the British Museum's copy. It is signed D. V. On a flyleaf is the autograph of a former owner of the book, Hugh W. Diamond. Beneath this is written: "Dr. Diamond's autograph. See Notes and Queries, Volume VI. and Volume X. Page 488. For a full and curious account of this rare volume see Notes and Queries, Volumes III. and IV. and the books there cited." On another leaf is: "Concerning the authorship of this book see 'Journal Historique,' Tome I., Page 110, and the references, particularly 5th, Choisis, Volume XXV., Page 468, and Volume XXVI., Page 480."

RAY S. BALL.—In answer to H. L. Simons, (March 9,) will say that the poem beginning "Gone, gone, forever, like a rushing wave," &c., can be found in the National Reader, (Page 418.) The author was George D. Prentice.

GEORGE HASWELL, Jr.—The lines quoted by Thomas B. Lude on March 23 are to be found in a song set to music, which I have, entitled "Driven from Home." The following is a copy of the title page: "Dedicated to Miss Nannie Rogers, Louisville, Ky. Written and composed by Will S. Hays. Published by J. L. Peters, 198 Broadway. Entered according to Act of Congress, A. D. 1864."

We are indebted to a large number of our readers for information in answer to Thomas B. Lude's query. Sara Moore gives the following as the first verse:

Out in the cold world, out in the street,
Asking a penny of each one I meet;
Cheerless I wander along through the day,
Wearing my young life in sorrow away.
No one to love me, no one to bless,
No one to pity me in my distress;
Fatherless, motherless, sadly I roam,
Cursed by my poverty, driven from home.

HENRY CHILSON.—In answer to H. B. Cook's inquiry for the author of the poem, "The Lesser Children," a few lines of which poem are quoted in your Appeal to Readers column, I beg to say that Ridgely Torrence is the author, and the poem was published in The Atlantic Monthly for September, 1905. Torrence is the author of "The House of a Hundred Lights," written in imitation of the style of Omar Khayyam; "El Dorado," a poetic drama of rare promise, and last, a very wonderful bit of work, "Abelard and Heloise," another poetic drama, which, I believe, places him on an equality with Stephen Phillips.

FREDERICK J. SHEPARD.—There is a considerable literature on the trial of Jesus besides what is cited in your issue of March 23. It seems to have begun with Joseph Salvador's "History of the Institutions of Moses," to which Andre Marie Jean Jacques Dupin, an eminent French lawyer, replied with his "Trial and Condemnation of Jesus." A new book on the subject is by Giovanni Rosadi, an Italian author; it was published in 1906 and was severely criticised by Septimus Buss in The Nineteenth Century for October of that year. Judge Gaynor's address was published in The Albany Law Journal, Volume 36. Judge Edward W. Hatch discussed the same subject in the Green Bag for September and October, 1893. The book by Innes was originally printed in The Contemporary Review for August and October, 1877, and was reprinted in Littell's Living Age, Volumes 134 and 135. Another article of importance on the subject is by H. C. Vedder in the Bibliotheca Sacra for October, 1892. Contrary to most authorities Mr. Vedder maintains that the Jews had a legal right to take life. Still other authors on the trial are J. C. Mabry, W. D. Mahan, and E. T. Wellford.

Appeals to Readers.

A. C. W.—Will you kindly tell me who is the author of the following:

"Lord God, Thou lettest the green things start
A new life every year.
Out of their sunken selves they rise
Erect and sweet and clear.
Behold the lily's pure white leaves
Unfolding by each mere?"

WILLIAM C. HUSTED.—I am in search of an Easter poem, "Te Martyrum Candidatus," by Lionel Johnson, a young Irish poet, who died, I think, in his early twenties. It commences:

"Ah, see the fair chivalry come, the companions of Christ:
White horsemen, who ride on white horses, the Knights of God!"

I have searched vainly for the published collection of his verses or the magazine in which this especial poem originally appeared. Can you put me upon the proper track?

R. W. P.—Can any of your readers kindly supply the remaining verses of the song, one verse of which I quote? This song was one of my mother sang fifty years ago:

"When I was a maiden, just 18 years old,
And as scornful as scornful could be,
I was taught to expect wit, wisdom, and gold,
And nothing else would do for me."

And could you or your readers also supply the verses of the song, "The Slaveship," sung also fifty years ago?

J. L. B.—Can you give me the author of this stanza?

"If this fair rose offend thy sight
Placed in thy bosom bare,
'Twill blush to own itself less white
And turn Lancastrian there."

Also the second stanza, where the rose, from envy of the brighter lips,

"Torkish turns scarin."

F. S.—Will you please give me the whole of the little poem which starts like this:

"I live for those who love me,
Whose hearts are kind and true,
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And waits my spirit, too," and ends something like this:

"When every wrong thing righted,
The whole world shall be lighted,
As Eden was of gold?"

Also the name of the author and where it can be found.—I once saw it in an old school reader, but have been unable to procure a copy or the name of the author.

O. H.—(1) Can you give me the name of the author of the following verse:

"This learned I from the shadow of a tree
That to and fro swayed on a garden wall,
Our shadow-selves, our influence may fall
Where we can never be?"

(2) Can you or any of your readers give the other verses of an old song called "Jeannette and Jeannot," of which I recall only what follows:

"You are going far away, far away from poor Jeannette,
And there's no one left to love me now, and you, too, will forget;
With your gun upon your shoulder, and your bayonet by your side,
You'll be courting some fair lady and be making her your bride.
Oh, if I were King of France, or, still better, Pope of Rome,
I'd have no fighting men abroad, no weeping maids at home?"

BESSIE G. REID.—Kindly furnish me information as to where I can find the following quotation:

"For time at last makes all things even,
And if we do but watch the hour,
There never yet was human power
Which could evade, if unforgiven,
The patient search and vigil long,
Of him who treasures up a wrong."

I have been told that it was written by H. W. Longfellow, but upon search I failed to find same.

QUACK JOURNALISM.

MRS. L. H. HARRIS will pay her respects to "Quack Journalism" in the May number of Putnam's Monthly. She describes and presents examples of the literary pabulum periodically dealt out to people morally "morbid and neturally incurable even when they are not sick." She has examined nearly one hundred specimens of this sort of periodical literature, and says that much of it is indecent, not in terms, but by logic and the law of suggestion, the authors having "lost the delicate sense of personal and mental propriety which belongs to the normal man or woman." The editors, she says, "are easily divided into Free Thoughters, New Thoughters, witch doctors with therapeutic ambitions, and sporadic cranks with nothing but inspirations and inkotands."

STORIES FROM HISTORY

AN excellent juvenile, and one that older readers will want to use to refresh their memories of minor figures and incidents of American history, is published by Messrs. Harpers under the title "Strange Stories of the Revolution." The book is one of attractive page, and furnished with excellent illustrations. The stories included, all simply and well told, are by George J. Varney, Winthrop Packard, Molly Elliot Seawell, Henry Gallup Paine, Howard Pyle, Percivel Ridsdale, G. T. Ferris, and H. M. Steele, and cover incidents of Paul Revere's Ride, Nancy Hanson at the Brandywine, the capture of the Margaretta, the British in New York, "Merlon's War," &c.

Sea Stories.

Frank A. Munsey is publishing a new magazine, The Ocean, devoted entirely to stories of the sea. Among books, "The Captain of the Kansas" continues to attest to the popularity of sea stories. As a matter of fact, "The Captain of the Kansas" promises to be Louis Tracy's most popular story. It seems to have struck the public's fancy even harder than "The Wings of the Morning."

APRIL

1907

FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

A Complete Edition of Fielding for His Bicentenary—Some Important Descriptive Books.

FOR the coming bicentenary, April 22, of the birth of Henry Fielding, Messrs. Harper & Brothers are issuing a complete edition of his works. The steady popularity of his books has given warrant to Sir Walter Scott in calling Fielding "the father of the English novel." Besides "Tom Jones," the new edition will help keep before us other works of that kind, "Joseph Andrews," "Jonathan Wild," &c., besides his verse, plays, and sketches of travel.

Advance sales for John Corbin's "Cave Man" exhausted the first edition of that book before its publication, and a further edition of it has been ordered by Messrs. Appleton.

Concurrent with the trial in May of officials of the Western Federation of Miners Collier's Weekly will commence an important series of articles on the history of the troubles of the mine owners with the federation that culminated in the murder of Gov. Steunenberg of Idaho. The writer is to be C. P. Connolly, known in this kind of work through his "Story of Montana" that appeared in McClure's Magazine.

The week's publications from Messrs. Scribners are "Outdoors," by Ernest McGaffey; "The Reformation in the Lands Beyond Germany," by T. M. Lindsay, and "Apollo," a manual of the history of art, by Solomon Reinach.

The Macmillan Company publishes this week the following books: "A Text of Plant Diseases," by George Massee—a new and revised edition; "An American Girl in India," a novel by Shelland Bradley, and two new volumes in the "New Classical Library," edited by Emil Reich, Plutarch's "Lives," covering Lives 11 to 16, and Herodotus, Books IV. to VI.

Sir Oliver Lodge, it seems, was forced into writing his now conspicuous book, "The Substance of Faith, Allied with Science." An outline of his work, printed for private use in his university lectures, was appropriated by some press, and in order to cover the unauthorized edition by a full and correct expression of his ideas he wrote this book as it now stands.

New books from Harpers this week are a novel by Norman Duncan, "The Cruise of the Shining Light," a book on Afghanistan entitled "Under the Absolute Amir," by Frank A. Martin, and a life of Ferdinand Magellan, (who was, incidentally, the discoverer of Guam and the Philippines,) by Frederick A. Ober, author of similar biographies, including that of Amerigo Vespucci, which was recently published, as is the present volume, in the Heroes of American History Series.

The unconventionality of Bishop Talbot's book, "My People of the Plains," with the frank phrase of the sometime "Cowboy Bishop," might not be expected to meet with approval among Church circles in England. But the English paper Christian World calls it "the book of the week."

Messrs. Dutton have just secured two important descriptive works, which they will bring out this Spring—"In Dwarf Land and Cannibal Country; a Record of Travel and Discovery in Central Africa," by Albert B. Lloyd, whose "Uganda to Khartoum" met with such marked success, and "A Book of the Pyrenees," by S. Baring-Gould. Mr. Baring-Gould's "A Book of the Riviera" is now in its fourth edition, having become rather the standard book on that district. As the same good workmanship may be expected in the new volume, and as its field is so uncovered, the account of the Pyrenees will be at least as welcome as its forerunner.

Next week Messrs. E. P. Dutton & Co. will publish two new volumes in their attractive series of "The College Monographs"—Magdalen College, Oxford," and "St. John's College, Cambridge." The former is written by J. Herbert Warren and the latter by R. J. Scott, both illustrated by Edmund H. New.

Capt. Osbon's book, "A Sailor of Fortune," has been adopted for use in reading courses by the Illinois Pupils' Reading Circle.

Messrs. Henry Holt & Co. have published a novel entitled "John Glynn," by Arthur Paterson, author of "Son of the Plains," "King's Agent," &c. The story of the novel is based upon the author's experiences in settlement work in London.

The John Lane Company have published Blanche Shoemaker's book of verse, "Woven of Dreams." Miss Shoemaker is now travelling in Egypt and Greece, and is at work on a serious prose volume.

John Lane Company, who have removed to their new quarters, 110 to 114 West Thirty-second Street, publish this week "The Life of Lord Chesterfield," by W. H. Craig, and "The Stahle Handbook," by F. H. Dale, a guide to the proper selection, care, and treatment of horses. The latter book is addressed to the man of moderate means and is illustrated with typical examples of horses, together with useful diagrams showing parts of the feet, legs, and teeth.

"A new and revised edition" of "Manners and Social Usages" suggests that the original copies of the books have sold.

Messrs. E. P. Dutton are issuing Ruskin in 16mo fifty-cent editions—"Modern Painters," five volumes; "Stones of Venice," three volumes; "Lamp of Architecture," one volume, and several others. The same house has reprinted "Catherine of Calais," an earlier novel of Mrs. Henry De La Pasture's.

Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons have met the demand for a cheaper edition of "The Pointer and His Predecessors," and have reissued that illustrated book. To their series of "Original Narratives of Early American History" they have added a third volume, edited by F. W. Hodge and T. H. Lewis, on "Spanish Explorers in the Southern United States, 1528-1543."

A weighty work by Denman W. Ross, lecturer at Harvard and Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, entitled "A Theory of Pure Design," is published by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. The book—a 4to, at $2.50 net—is furnished with many designs and diagrams.

The first edition of "The Case of Dr. Horace," Messrs. Baker & Taylor's new detective story, has been sold out.

Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co., published this week the following books, previously announced: Joyce's "The Story of Ancient Irish Civilization," Lethbridge's "India and Imperial Preference," Hankey's "The Church and the State," Galton's "Church and State in France," and Treveiyan's "Garibaldi's Defence of the Roman Republic."

Messrs. McClurg & Co. are adding to their beautiful little bibliophiles' series two volumes of the life of Sir Thomas Bodley, written by himself.

Those who have liked "Everyman," the old morality play, and have feared for its lack of appreciation, will be glad to hear that the sales of the book have brought the edition published by Duffield & Co. to still another edition.

The issue of The Garden Magazine for April 15 will contain three articles instructive as to the utilization of small areas for gardening. A. F. Webster writes on "Thirty Dollars' Worth of Vegetables From a City Lot," A. E. Wilkinson describes "A 25-Foot Square Garden," and F. C. Leihle continues the series on "The Cheapest Gardens for the Smallest Lots."

H. C. Chatfield Taylor's "Molière," on the strength of which the author received the cross of the Legion of Honor, is being well received in England.

Fleming H. Revell Company have received from China the manuscript of Arthur H. Smith's forthcoming book on "America and China." Dr. Smith is the author of "Chinese Characteristics" and "China in Convulsion."

Booker T. Washington will contribute to Putnam's Monthly an article on "The Position of the Negro in America."

Charles Livingston Bull will illustrate Mr. C. G. D. Roberts's new book of animal stories, "Haunters of the Silences," to be published by Messrs. L. C. Page & Co.

Messrs. John Lane Company are now issuing Miss Willcock's novel, "The Wingless Victory," previously announced. The book has appeared this Spring in England and has received a rather special mark of distinction from many critics of the London papers.

Gypsy Smith, the Evangelist, author of his "Autobiography" and "As Jesus Passed By," may remain in this country two years more because of the interest he has excited among his many new friends in religious circles.

The projected work on Labrador by Dr. Wilfred Grenfell is assuming such proportions that it will probably run into two volumes. Dr. Greofell is just now returning to New York after an extended lecturing tour on the subject of his work in Labrador.

The unique success of the juvenile author, C. F. King, Jr., with his book, "A Boy's Vacation Abroad," has brought him what is probably the record, for one of his age, of literary wage. When he went to Boston for his Easter vacation from school his publishers presented him with a check for $750 as his first royalty. The book was published at Christmas time, and since then 5,000 copies of it have been sold.

Messrs. McClure, Phillips & Co. will introduce a new novelist this Spring, whose first book, to appear under the title of "The Artistic Temperament," has already made a great hit in London. The identity of the author is kept even from the publishers, the pen name "Jane Wardle" being used. The story deals with the lives of London painter folk.

Beechhurst

RIGHT ON THE SOUND
at Whitestone Landing
Opposite Fort Schuyler... ...11 Miles from 34th St.

With charming landscapes, magnificent views of the Sound, the East River and the country beyond as far as the distant Palisades of the Hudson, Beechhurst is without exception the most beautiful spot in the vicinity of New York.

More than a quarter of a million dollars has been spent by us in the development and improvement of this ideal Residential Park—and considerably more than this for the purchase of the land.

Does not that demonstrate our faith and establish the future of the place beyond peradventure?

We will ask you to determine the effect which our work and the new transportation facilities must have on the value of land in Beechhurst.

A number of houses—artistic in architecture—are now in course of construction. They are for sale to desirable people on easy terms.

The place enjoys all the advantages of the New York City government. It has every modern convenience, broad streets with cement sidewalks, water supply, sewers, gas, electric light, etc.

Lots are 10% lower than they will be after May 1st, and a wider choice is afforded.

MORA

Model B Tourer, $2,200

With Magneto, $2,500.

The very first impression of the Mora Tourer is that of a big, roomy, easy-riding car.

The symmetry of its lines, the invitingly comfortable seats and the extraordinarily large tonneau appeal to those who wish to take motoring in comfort.

The Mora Tourer materlally expresses the ideal medlum powered, serviceable car, whose cost is within the means of the average man.

The Mora Tourer is designed for a speed up to 50 miles an hour, with a flexibility that allows of throttle control from maxlmum to 4 miles an hour without change of gears.

When it is considered that the high-powered heavy cars that claim whirlwlnd speed are carrying an excess of weight at an exorbitant cost of maintenance, fuel and tires, the light-weight 24 H. P. Mora Tourer stands out brilliantly as a tempting investment for the man whose speed demands are within the bounds of reason and the law.

The Mora Tourer gives you all the speed you can use, at a saving of weight, fuel, tires, wear and tear that the higher powered heavy cars demand for a speed they are rarely called upon to deliver. This saving alone makes owning a Mora Tourer worth while.

Let us give you a demonstration in this car. You will be agreeably surprised to find how good a car CAN be sold for $2,200. The Mora Cars are sold complete with full equipment including 7-inch headlights and generator.

Brasier

The maximum rating given in brackets above is based on conventional American ratings.

In France the Brasier sells at the same Franc price as the three other greatest cars.

We find that many people believe the Brasier to be far beyond their means. This is based on their knowledge, that the Brasier is one of the four greatest cars in the world.

The Brasier is sold direct from factory to owner; you save the several profits—$1,000, or more in some instances—that in so many cases must be divided among the parties connected with the importation and sale of foreign cars.

No other foreign car is sold in this country at a price nearly so low as the Brasier, excepting the third and fourth rate makes, and even these range from hundreds to a thousand more in price than the Brasier.

Do you know what the Brasier has done in racing? It twice consecutively won the French elimination trials, defeating all the best cars of France. It twice consecutively won the Gordon Bennett Cup Race, defeating all the best cars of the world. Its victories in other races of nearly equal fame are literally too long to publish.

Of its dozens of victories over the world's best cars in reliability, durability and endurance contests, space permits us to cite only these:—Two of the first four cars to finish in the great Paris-Madrid race were Brasiers. The Brasier established a new long distance world's record in the 1,000 mile non-stop contest by the Auto Club of Great Britain, a standard 24 H. P. touring car, running 1,000 miles over country roads without a single stop, adjustment or repair. Hill climbing? Oh, yes! The Brasier won in the heavy touring car class in the Mount Washington climb to the clouds.

What other car in the world can match these records?

We have now in our salesrooms the first 1907 Brasier to be seen in this country. It has some new features which no other car can give.

The 1907 Brasier is equipped with an entirely new type of carbureter, extremely simple, absolutely positive, so designed that the engine can run at very low speed and still pull with perfect regularity. It has a selective type of transmission on the 15-20 H. P., the 16-26 H. P., the 30-40-[50] H. P. and the 50-60-[75] H. P., allowing of direct drive on both third and fourth gears. Other features combine to sustain the Brasier reputation of being a year ahead of other foreign makes.

We can deliver these cars almost immediately. Foreseeing their great demand this season we have on hand a number of splendid, luxurious bodies, standard size to fit any chassis.

Visit our splendid salesrooms and see the famous Brasier.

Let us call at your house and take you to your office in it any time—any day.

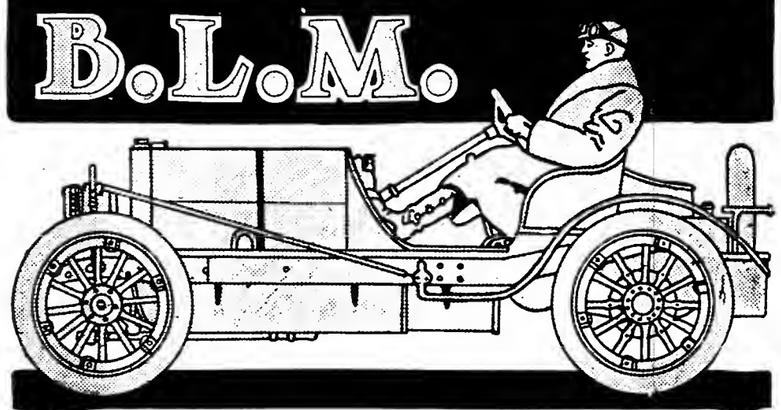
B.L.M.



THE B. L. M. is a 24 H. P. racer. By this we mean not only that its lines and its speed are those of a small racing car, but that all the principles of construction, all the perfection of detail in the finish of its parts are those which are embodied in those great racing machines on which manufacturers stake their reputations. This speed, this ability to withstand a terrific strain, this combination of strength with lightness makes for so great a cost that the manufacturer cannot possibly afford to put out a touring car or a runabout to compare with the speed marvel which represents him in events such as the Vanderbilt Cup Race. You do find these qualities in the B. L. M. at $3,500.

THE average runabout is only a chassis of the standard touring car with a runabout body slapped on. Its owner has the same cost of upkeep as a man owning a touring car. While weight has been reduced only 150 to 200 pounds, carry capacity has been reduced 40 to 50 per cent., and speed and power as compared to weight increased only 5 per cent. The B. L. M. is much lighter than any runabout in the country and still it is built as substantially as any racing car.

THE B. L. M. is designed and constructed for one purpose only: to give you all the endurance, lasting value, perfection of construction and perfect efficiency at all times of a racing car, which it resembles in every way save in point of size. It has the added advantage of being practically unskiddable. One can fly around corners at a very great speed without danger of upsetting or skidding; its centre of gravity is such, its suspension so perfect, that it is the safest car you can use for any purpose.

THE B. L. M. has a perfection of detail entirely lacking in racing cars, which makes it the most complete and comfortable car in the world for a long, fast tour. Its tires are carried on imported Harburg detachable rims; a pair of spare tires, fully inflated on their rims, carried behind, enables one to defy punctures, or other tire troubles, as tires can be changed in a moment. Its light weight, only 1,400 lbs., enables many an owner to make thousands of miles over all sorts of roads on a single set of tires. Equipment includes Rushmore lamps, a generator, a spare rim and all ordinary tools. Write for our catalog number six. It is a wealth of information on the points which make for greatness in a car.

THE FOUR-CYCLE PAYROLL

and how the

ELMORE

eliminates it.

DO YOU want to be the chap who must scrape together the four cycle pay-roll? Do you want to be OBLIGED to hire a chauffeur, or do you want to run your own car? The Elmore has a two-cycle engine you know; it does away with all valves, it eliminates one hundred and seventy parts that the other American cars, the four-cycle engine cars, MUST have. The Elmore engine is so simple that Elmore owners do not DREAM of having chauffeurs. They get the real good fun out of motoring; they manage their own cars. If you have a four-cycle car you DO NEED a chauffeur, and you need to keep him busy tinkering at the car too. Item No. 1 on the pay-roll.

THE two-cycle engine gives a forward impulse at EVERY stroke of the piston—result, no pounding, no racking, no jerking, constantly to put out of adjustment and to wear out delicate parts. The Elmore engine has no delicate parts; it runs from one end of the year to the other on a cost of up-keep that falls away below $10 for the entire year, as scores of letters in our office from Elmore owners will show you. The four-cycle engine gives a forward impulse with only EVERY OTHER stroke of the piston; there is a sharp forward jerk, a constant succession of racking, straining plunges instead of the smooth, easy, strainless glide of the Elmore. These constant shocks rack every part of the car, and that is why the four-cycle cars begin to deteriorate FROM ALMOST the FIRST MOMENT you put them in use. Result, big and constant repair bills to keep the poor four-cycle engine going. Item No. 2 in the pay-roll.

THE tire man is a pretty nice sort of chap, and he has to live; but do YOU want to be the one to pay his rent and buy his cigars? The Elmore, with its constant forward impulse at EVERY stroke of the piston, its light weight by elimination of dozens of useless parts, saves tire cost in a fashion which no other car can equal. The four-cycle engine with jerks, its irregular advances, the added and USELESS weight, makes tire troubles INEVITABLE. It JAMS the tire against the point of contact, causing an unequal pressure which is more destructive than hundreds of miles of road. The Elmore owners frequently go through an entire season of hard use, thousands of miles of touring, on ONE set of tires. The four-cycle engine—well, ask ANY owner of ANY car other than the Elmore what his tire bill is; then set that amount down as Item No. 3 on the pay-roll. Do you want to furnish the pay-roll?

35 H. P. 4-Cylinder Elmore. Price $2,500.

There is only one way to appreciate the advantages of the Elmore simplicity. Come in and try it. We will show you all the speed you can use; more power than you can use; a freedom from motoring troubles of all sorts and a car that has NO up-keep expense attached to it. The Elmore at $1,750 or $2,500 is a far better car in every way than many cars selling at from $4,000 to $5,000. Come in and we will SHOW you that this is so.

Matheson

EVENTS continually prove our contention that the Matheson is equal in design and construction to the best foreign cars and far superior to them in performance over American roads.

BEATING all records made this winter between New York and Boston is something to be proud of. We are prouder of the fact that the 1906 Matheson car which performed this feat during the recent Boston Auto. Show arrived in perfect running order, without need of repairs or adjustments; no trouble of any kind—not even tire trouble. This, too, in spite of the fact that the roads were worse than at any other time this year.

We are proud, too, that this wonderful run was made by an amateur, a private owner of a Matheson, R. G. Kelsey, out of sheer pride in his car and belief in its supremacy. This is typical of the way Matheson owners feel about their cars. They believe them to be the best cars in the world for American roads. They are our salesmen and they give demonstrations for us. They have caused the demand which has nearly exhausted the Matheson output for 1907.

STANDARD OIL FOUND GUILTY

Could Be Fined $29,260,000 Under Chicago Jury's Rebate Verdict.

ONLY ONE BALLOT TAKEN

Judge Landis Charged That Company Was Supposed to Know Rates.

STRONG PRECEDENT MADE

Many Other Cases Brought Against Standard Oil Can Now Be Pressed by the Government.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 13.—Under a verdict of guilty brought in by a Federal jury in Judge K. M. Landis's court to-night the Standard Oil Company is liable to fines aggregating $29,260,000. The verdict was found in the rebating case which has been on trial for six weeks, and the company was found guilty on 1,463 separate counts in the indictment, each of which calls for a fine of from $1,000 to $20,000 under the Elkins law. Only one ballot was required to find the verdict.

This is the first time the Standard Oil Company has been found guilty on a rebate charge, although it has often been accused of taking rebates to stifle competition. The victory of the Government is even greater than appears at first. Upon the plan of this prosecution will be based the trials of the many other cases against the oil trust already started in Illinois, Tennessee, Louisiana, Ohio, and New York.

Judge Landis gave the case to the jury at 6 o'clock this evening after summing up by counsel. Great interest centred in his charge because of its bearing on the defense put in by the Standard Oil attorneys. The prosecution was based on the acceptance by the company from the Chicago & Alton Railroad of a rate of 6 cents per 100 pounds on oil shipments from Whiting, Ind., to St. Louis, when the regular rate was 18 cents.

The defense sought to prove that the company was unaware of the fact that the six-cent rate had not been filed with the Inter-State Commerce Commission as provided by the Elkins law. Evidence was offered by the Government to show that it was the duty of the company's officials to know whether the rate was in the hands of the Inter-State Commerce Commission.

Charge of the Judge.

Touching on this point Judge Landis, in his charge, said:

"The indictment alleges that the defendant accepted a concession knowingly. To sustain this averment the proofs need not establish that the defendant had actual knowledge of the lawful rate. It was the duty of the defendant diligently to endeavor in good faith to get from the Chicago & Alton Railway Company the lawful rate by applying to one of the railroad company's officials. In making this endeavor defendant is presumed to have known that the railway company would be guilty of a misdemeanor if it gave the defendant a rate on inter-State traffic which was not set down on paper and a copy of the schedule filed with the Inter-State Commerce Commission."

In regard to an assertion made by the defense that the Standard Oil Company did not know of the existence of the tariff on which the indictment was based, Judge Landis said the evidence submitted by the Government went to show that there was a department in the Standard Oil Company which dealt with rates, and that it apparently would have been necessary for the head of this department to be familiar with the tariff in question.

Only One Ballot by the Jury.

After getting the case the jury went to dinner for an hour. After its return a discussion was held which showed substantial unanimity, and one ballot only was taken. The jury at 9 o'clock sent word that it was ready to report, and when Judge Landis arrived, at 9:45, it marched into court.

The verdict was handed to Deputy Clerk Sullivan, who first read the finding of the jury that the company was not guilty on 440 counts which had been declared faulty by Judge Landis during the trial, and upon which an instructed verdict has been called for.

The second finding of the jury then was read:

"We, the jury, find the defendant, the Standard Oil Company, guilty in the manner and form charged in the indictment," read Clerk Sullivan.

"Is that your verdict, gentlemen?" asked Judge Landis.

"It is," they responded in chorus.

"The defendant desires to enter a motion for a new trial," said John S. Miller, chief counsel for the company.

"The clerk will enter your motion," replied Judge Landis. He then turned to the jury and said:

"At this time I desire to express to you the appreciation of the court, as well as my own personal appreciation, for the service you have rendered in spite of the great discomfort to which you have been subjected."

District Attorney Sims, who has the honor of gaining the conviction, stepped over to shake hands with the jurymen.

Assistant District Attorneys Wilkerson and Parkin joined their chief. It was Mr. Wilkerson who bore the brunt of the fight in the trial, as it was Mr. Parkin who gathered much of the data.

Grew Ont of Garfield Report.

The prosecution is one of those growing out of the Garfield report, submitted to President Roosevelt last May. The report showed in detail the various methods employed by Standard Oil to stamp out competition, and one of the chief ones proved to be secret rates enjoyed on practically every big railroad of the country. The big refinery of the company is located at Whiting, and from it the company has supplied the oil trade throughout the Central States.

Even at the minimum fine fixed by law the amount to be assessed against the company under the verdict would be $1,463,000. Before the exact amount is determined a motion in arrest of judgment will be presented and argued by the attorneys for the defense. It is their contention that only one offense was committed, and the maximum fine cannot be placed at more than $20,000. In the motion to quash made before the trial Judge Landis indicated an adverse ruling on this point.

COCKRELL NOW ADMITS IT.

Says the Woman with Him Is Not His Wife—Statement by Father.

Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

LONDON, April 13.—Ephraim Cockrell, son of ex-United States Senator Cockrell, now admits that the woman with whom he came to London is not his wife. When asked yesterday by THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent about the matter, he said he would not state who the woman with him was. He added that he had no intention of going back to America, but expected to make his home in London.

It has been ascertained that Mr. Cockrell's companion is a married woman who has lived apart from her husband for about three years. The members of the American colony here to whom Cockrell introduced her now know the facts in the case. The truth came out through the receipt by one of the most prominent Americans in London of a telegram from Mr. Cockrell's wife, in which she asked the whereabouts of her husband and said he had run off with another woman.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—Ex-Senator Cockrell of Missouri, now a member of the Inter-State Commerce Commission, is at last convinced that the Ephraim Cockrell referred to in the dispatches from London is his son. In justice to Mrs. Ephraim Cockrell, to himself, and to the public, Mr. Cookrell to-night authorized the publication of the following statement:

"I have done my very best in my son Ephraim's behalf, but he has declined to follow my advice. Already he has proved a source of great expense to me, and I am now unable to render him further assistance. Those who deal with him must do so independently of his relationship to me. No one can more deeply or more sorrowfully regret the course he is alleged to be pursuing than I.

"He has treated his wife shamefully. She has not been with him in Europe, but has been either with me, my family, or with her father's family.

"Ephraim left this country last June, and since that time I have had no communication with him, nor have I known his address.

"The news contained in the London dispatches is indeed a humiliation to me."

Mrs. Ephraim Cockrell arrived in Washington to-night, and is the guest of her father-in-law.

CARNEGIE TO THE KAISER.

Replicas of Prehistoric Monster Given to Germany and France.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 13.—Without any flourish of trumpets, the closing exercises of the dedication of the new Carnegie Institute were held to-day. Andrew Carnegie, who gave the Institute to the city, was not present at the finish. In the same Democratic manner that he had entered Pittsburg for the exercises, Mr. Carnegie left this morning.

Mr. Carnegie left at 10 o'clock on the Pennsylvania. According to his wish, there was no demonstration, and not half a dozen people were at the station to see him depart. He and his party occupied seats in the regular chair car.

The only thing on the programme for to-day was the conferring of degrees of Western University of Pennsylvania on several of the distinguished foreign guests.

Just prior to the conferring of degrees Samuel Harden Church, Secretary of the Institute, announced that Mr. Carnegie had presented to Germany and France replicas of the giant diplodocus, the prized possession of the Carnegie Museum. Both Germany and France took especial interest in the dedication. Some time ago Mr. Carnegie presented a replica of the diplodocus to the British Museum, and he decided to make similar gifts to France and Germany.

Lieut. Gen. von Loewenfeld cabled the Emperor of Mr. Carnegie's gift, and this afternoon received the following reply:

"Please express to Mr. Carnegie my thanks for his precious offer, which I am happy to receive, and also for his attention to me shown by his gift."

LAWTON UNVEILING ROW.

President Says He Will Make But One Speech in Indianapolis.

Special to The New York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, April 13.—The controversy between the Grand Army organization of the State and the Lawton Monument Commission over Memorial Day exercises and the ceremonies incident to the unveiling of the Gen. Lawton Statue was renewed to-day, when a letter was received from Secretary Loeb, which reads:

By direction of the President, I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th inst. and to say that it has been referred to the Vice President with the information that the President can only make one speech at Indianapolis. The President's understanding from the committee that called upon him was that the Memorial Day exercises were to be held in connection with the dedication of Gen. Lawton's statue, and their invitation was accordingly accepted.

Gen. Fesler, to whom the letter was addressed, said that the President had been misinformed when told that the two ceremonies had been merged, and any intimation to that effect was misleading.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—The possibility is that President Roosevelt will have something to say about the railroad question in one of the three speeches he is to deliver before going to Oyster Bay for the Summer. He is to speak at Jamestown, at the unveiling of the Lawton monument in Indianapolis, and before the students of the Michigan Agricultural College at Lansing, Mich.

IRELAND MEETS ROOSEVELT.

Called to Congratulate the President on His Physical Strength.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—Archbishop Ireland of St. Paul, who has been attending the meeting of the Trustees of the Catholic University, called at the White House to-day. He declared that his call was a personal one and that there was an absence of political talk.

"I just came to congratulate the President on his strength," said the Archbishop.

"You mean his political strength?" asked one of the bystanders.

"No, I mean his physical strength to cope with the great responsibilities of his position," said Archbishop Ireland with a smile.

WHITE DENIES PLAN TO BLOCK DEWEY

Did Not, as Ambassador, Suggest Admiral Dieterich's Move in Manila Bay.

GERMANY WAS OUR FRIEND

It Would Have Been Treason, ex-Diplomat Says, to Have Tried to Thwart America's Policy.

Special to The New York Times.

WATKINS, N. Y., April 13.—At a dinner in New York on April 8, given by Herman Ridder in honor of Charlemagne Tower, United States Ambassador to Germany, Melville E. Stone in a speech said:

We have not been quite fair with the German Government, and I have been waiting for a good while to see some matters cleared up. The Diederichs episode at Manila is one of these things. When the whole story is told I assure you that it will be found that the German Government acted with scrupulous propriety, and that if all the facts were disclosed we should have no right whatever to make complaint.

Inquiry in Washington as to the Manila Bay incident brought forth an unofficial report that the action of Admiral Diederichs had been entirely misunderstood by the public, and that he was there by the direction of his Government, which had acted on what at the Foreign Office in Berlin was regarded as an invitation from the United States Government, presented by the United States Ambassador, Andrew D. White, and that the object was to have Germany play a part which would give the United States Government an excuse for abandoning the project of taking over the Philippines.

Later another explanation was forthcoming that Ambassador White had acted entirely upon his own responsibility, that his action had been promptly repudiated as soon as it became known in Washington, and his recall had been seriously considered as the result of his unauthorized action in this matter.

Mr. White's Denial.

Ex-Ambassador White, who has just returned from the West Indies, was interviewed by a correspondent for THE NEW YOAK TIMES to-day at this little village, where he hurried from his ship to attend the sickbed of his daughter, who is lying critically ill. He denied the truth of the report from beginning to end.

While Mr. White has taken no pains to conceal the fact that he is not a believer in a colonial policy for the United States, and has fully made up his mind that the possession of the Philippines will only be a source of future trouble and complications to this country, and that the Filipinos never can be brought up to the standard of civic intelligence where they may be considered fit to become an integral part of the American body politic, he emphatically denied that he had permitted himself to be swayed by his personal opinions and beliefs in the exercise of his important mission in the German capital.

"Why such an action would virtually have amounted to high treason," said Mr. White when his attention was called to Mr. Stone's remarks and the report that had been offered in explanation. Discussing with great freedom the sentiment among the German people at the time of the Spanish war, Mr. White said that the bitterness against this country which was manifest on every hand, and particularly in the German press, was a thing entirely independent of the Diederichs incident. It had existed even during the period immediately preceding the declaration of war and the Dewey coup. Mr. White pointed out that practically the only friends this country had in Germany at that critical time were the Kaiser, Chancellor von Bülow, and the representatives of the Foreign Office at Berlin.

"Nothing of the kind ever took place," said the former Ambassador. "All this story about my going to the Foreign Office and making these representations is the most utter nonsense and stuff. There is not a particle of truth in it.

Proud of Dewey.

"It never occurred to me to forestall any action of our naval or military forces in the Far East, or to try and undo their work after it was done. I was as proud of Dewey's achievement as any other American citizen, and there was no earthly reason why I should endeavor to undo it. On the contrary, I always referred to our triumph in the Philippines and the West Indies in my interviews at the Foreign Office as showing that the war could have but one result, namely, the triumph of the United States. The archives both at the American Embassy at Berlin and at the State Department will show this amply, and they will also show that no conduct of mine at that time or any other time, either at Berlin or elsewhere, was either 'repudiated' or even disapproved by the State Department. It will be found that my conduct during this period was entirely approved by the State Department, and later approved by the President himself.

"I have studied considerably the subject of mythmaking and the growth of legends, but I never realized wholly before how—even in the most civilized country—myths and legends can originate which are wholly contrary to the simplest facts of ascertained history. An interesting chapter might be written on 'After-Dinner Myths.' This story of my attempting to undo Dewey's victories seems to be one of them. Nothing of this kind was ever said or done by me at the German Foreign Office or elsewhere. Why, it would have been virtually high treason.

"Any instructions the German Government may have issued to the German Admiral at Manila Bay were independent of any representations made by me. I never asked the Foreign Office to send any instructions to the Admiral. I have always supposed that their instructions to him were of a general nature, giving him considerable latitude. I feel sure, though, that he was never authorized in the slightest degree to commit any act really or even apparently unfriendly to the United States."

Germany's Hostile Press.

Mr. White spoke with much freedom regarding the popular sentiment of dislike and resentment against the United States and the hostile attitude of almost the entire German press at that critical period. But he insisted that the distinction could not be made too sharp between this popular sentiment which was manifest practically all over the continent of Europe and the attitude of the German Government. The former, Mr. White said,

BANKER'S WIDOW TO WED.

Mrs. Brown, 66 Years Old, Fell In Love at First Sight.

BALTIMORE, April 13.—Mrs. Laura Brown, widow of Alexander D. Brown, millionaire banker and member of the old banking firm of Alexander Brown & Sons, announces that she is going to marry again. She is 66 years old, and Charles H. Kaufmann of Boston, the bridegroom elect, is 32 years her junior. They will be married in a few weeks at St. Joseph's Catholic Church, Baltimore County. Mrs. Brown is a Catholic, and Mr. Kaufmann will embrace her faith.

Mrs. Brown, in telling of her approaching marriage said to a reporter:

"Just let my friends know that I intend to get married again, even if I am 66 years old. You can also tell them that it was love at first sight, too, that excuse—an odd way to put it—often affords a loophole to many through which to escape. But in my case it covers matters precisely. Mr. Kaufmann and myself loved each other from the very first moment we saw each other at Narragansett last Summer.

"To some it will sound funny that a woman of my age should love anybody at first sight. I did, however, and we are very, very happy. Mr. Kaufmann doesn't mind my age. People who truly love each other never think of ages. After our marriage we will go on a long journey. We wish to be to ourselves after the happy event, and it may be that we'll go abroad. We will eventually return to Baltimore and live for a while at Ellwood, but there is a possibility of my leaving Baltimore altogether."

BLAMES THAW'S MOTHER.

Stepson Says He Urged Her to Put Harry In Asylum Long Ago.

Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

ROME, April 13.—A. Blair Thaw, stepbrother of Harry K. Thaw, who has been spending the Winter in Rome with his wife and daughter, is very indignant over the notoriety given the family name through the trial of Harry for the murder of Stanford White, and which will have to be undergone again. He throws the blame chiefly on Harry's mother, who, if she had followed her stepson's advice, would have put Harry in an asylum long ago.

Blair Thaw says he was surprised that what happened in this city did not occur long before. He had expected that Harry would be killed, which, he added, "would perhaps have been the better issue." He says he went twice from England to America to induce Harry's mother to shut him up.

Asked about the trial, Mr. Thaw said: "I have nothing to say about that, only that it would have been unjust to convict him, because it is a pathological and not a criminal case."

Mrs. A. Blair Thaw, who has been entertained much here by friends, has frequently expressed admiration for Harry's sister, the Countess of Yarmouth, and his brothers for standing loyally by him, regardless of scandal.

SHONTS IN FULL CONTROL.

All of Interborough-Metropolitan's Operations Are Now In His Hands.

Theodore P. Shonts, the recently elected President of the Interborough-Metropolitan Company, has now taken absolute charge of all construction and operation work in the company. When Mr. Shonts came to this city to accept the Presidency of the traction company, it was understood that he would have direct charge of those branches of the company's business, while August Belmont was to remain in charge of the financial matters, with the title of Chairman of the Board of Directors.

It was found, however, that the Interborough-Metropolitan Company, being simply a holding company for many smaller concerns, Mr. Shonts, in his capacity of President, had no legal right to issue orders to the officers of any of the underlying companies, and consequently his powers were very much limited. The difficulty has been overcome by the creation in all the underlying companies of Executive Committees where none existed before, and by the election of Mr. Shonts as Chairman of these committees in all underlying companies.

This move places Mr. Shonts securely in control of all the operating and construction work, and it is expected that he will direct the bidding on the new subways as well as institute important changes in the operating of the company's various lines.

AUTO STRUCK BY TRAIN.

Brooklyn Woman Among Those Injured Near Savannah.

SAVANNAH, April 13.—A sight-seeing automobile containing eight or ten tourists, while returning from the Hermitage, a few miles from Savannah, to-day, was struck by an engine at the crossing of the Central of Georgia Railroad and the Bay Street extension. Three persons were injured, among them Mrs. Mary T. Rourke of Brooklyn, N. Y., whose left foot was crushed, demanding amputation. Helen R. McManimy, a sister of Mrs. Rourke, escaped unhurt.

Lester Lukens, the chauffeur, and Charles Anderson, the lecturer of the car, together with the engineer and fireman of the train, are under arrest.

INDICT D. H. MORRIS AS LOTTERY OWNER

Mobile Grand Jury Also Accuses Prominent New Orleans Men.

WEALTHY MAN CONFESSES

F. X. Fitzpatrick of Cambridge Pleads Guilty—More Indictments Are Expected Soon.

Special to The New York Times.

MOBILE, Ala., April 13.—Despite strong efforts to prevent such radical action, the Federal Grand Jury here has indicted prominent men of the North and South as the alleged conspirators who have kept alive the old New Orleans lottery under the name of the Honduras lottery. The men who are said to be at the head of the scheme are:

Dave Hennen Morris and Alfred Hennen Morris of New York and New Orleans.

Albert Baldwin, St., President of the New Orleans National Bank, President of the Southern Yacht Club at New Orleans, and prominent in carnival affairs.

Frank T. Howard, capitalist and receiver of the New Orleans Water Works. He is one of the principal stockholders in the St. Charles Hotel in New Orleans, and is said to be the wealthiest man in that city.

E. J. Demarest and Chapman Hyams of New Orleans.

Others among the twenty-four who were indicted are:

Gen. W. L. Cabell of Dallas, Texas, an ex-Confederate officer, more than 70 years old, is alleged to have supervised the drawings in Honduras.

Frank X. Fitzpatrick, a well-known resident of Cambridge, Mass., reputed to be very wealthy.

Harry W. Henderson and W. C. Henderson, formerly of Brooklyn, N. Y.; W. P. Johnson of Cincinnati, Ohio; Joseph L. Shaw of Washington, E. L. Penace, L. S. Graham, and Paul Conrad of New Orleans, and Robert K. Thompson, J. Rea, and C. W. Bredow of Mobile. These men were supposed to be interested in various ways in printing and distributing lottery tickets and in the drawings.

The Federal Grand Jury had been in session here for two weeks. Even bets were made that it would not return bills against the prominent men concerned. The action of the Grand Jury is the result of the work of Attorney General Nields, District Attorney, W. H. Armbrecht of this city, and the band of Secret Service men who have been at work for the last three months digging up evidence. Their chief proof came from a recent raid on the Mobile office of the lottery company recently.

The Grand Jury will be in session another week, or perhaps two, and it is stated on good authority that several more men of prominence in the United States will be indicted.

Frank X. Fitzpatrick, the Cambridge man, went before United States Commissioner Richard Jones this afternoon and pleaded guilty to the charge of conspiring to violate the anti-lottery law. Sentence was suspended until late in May. The penalty is a fine of $10,000, but it is thought that the Government will not impose it on him. Others surrendered and were put under bonds. Some want to plead guilty if the Government will consent to a recommendation as to fines, but the prosecutors have declined to do this. One of the witnesses whose fees amounted to $155.50 turned the money back to the Government.

A conference was held in the office of District Attorney Armbrecht Friday night, after which Secret Service men left for various parts of the country to keep their eyes on those wanted. Three hours after the indictments were issued by the Grand Jury yesterday many of the persons were under arrest and were permitted to give bond.

NEW ORLEANS, April 13.—A surprise came to several prominent New Orleans citizens to-day from Mobile, when it became known that the Federal Grand Jury sitting had indicted for conspiracy in violating the anti-lottery law Albert Baldwin, Sr.; Chapman Hyams, Frank T. Howard, Dave Hennen Morris, Alfred Hennen Morris, and others. Such of the accused men as were in the city were ordered to appear before United States Commissioner Chiapella and give bonds.

Baldwin and Hyams immediately surrendered before Commissioner Chiapella. Both pleaded not guilty, waived examination, and were released on $1,000 bonds to appear before the court at Mobile.

Baldwin, speaking of the lottery company, said for himself and Hyams:

"We do not own a share of stock in it, and we do not know anything about this matter."

A servant at Dave Hennen Morris's residence, 269 West Seventy-second Street, said last night that Mr. Morris was in bed, and had given orders not to be disturbed.

Upon the death of his father Dave Hennen Morris, together with his brother, Alfred Hennen Morris, maintained the father's racing stable. Each of the brothers kept a half interest in Morris Park until it was abandoned as a racing centre.

Dave Hennen Morris of late years has been known as a prominent automobilist, having been President of the Automobile Club of America and being at the present time one of the Board of Governors. Under his direction at various times a number of automobile meets have taken place.

Mrs. Dave Hennen Morris was Miss Alice Shepard, Elliott F. Shepard's daughter.

ACTOR ARRESTED ON STAGE.

Is Watched by Detectives from Wings —Heath Charged with Theft.

With detectives watching every movement while he was on the stage, a man who gave the name of Donald T. Heaoh, 23 years old, of 149 Lawrence Street, Brooklyn, played last night at the American Theatre, and though aware that he was under surveillence did not once during the play show any sign of nervousness. At the close of the performance, he was taken to the West Thirty-seventh Street station, where a charge of grand larceny for theft of $374 from the Municipal Court, Chicago, was lodged against him. He was later released by Magistrate Whitman in $2,500 bail.

BIG STICK FOR ROOSEVELT.

Brownsville Offers a Jewel-Set, Carved Cane to Him.

Special to The New York Times.

GALVESTON, Tex., April 13.—A big stick, silver mounted, set with forty-five precious stones for the States, and hand carved with nearly 400 figures and emblems, is a gift the citizens of Brownsville, Texas, have prepared for President Roosevelt. It is intended as an acknowledgment of his action in dismissing from the Army the negro soldiers charged with having committed the midnight attack upon Brownsville.

The cane weighs four and three-quarter pounds, and is made from a piece of Mexican coffee wood which had been treasured in the Houston family since Sam Houston was President of the Texas Republic. The engraver spent nearly six months in the work.

FAIRBANKS INITIATED.

Vice President Learns the Mysteries of the Mystic Shriners.

INDIANAPOLIS, April 13.—Charles W. Fairbanks, Vice President of the United States, was a member of a large class that was initiated into the mysteries of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine last night.

GEORGE M. COHAN TO MARRY.

His Bride-to-Be Is Miss Agnes Nolan of Brookline.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, April 13.—George M. Cohan, the actor, who closed an engagement here to-night, said that he was going to marry again. He recently was divorced from Ethel Levey, who is to marry Robert Edeson.

"The young woman I am to marry," said Mr. Cohan, "is Miss Agnes Nolan of Brookline, Mass., a charming little girl, and we have arranged to be wedded on the next Fourth of July, my birthday."

650 EMPLOYES LOCKED OUT.

Laborers' Strike Closes Big New Jersey Stove Works.

DOVER, N. J., April 13.—As a result of a strike of the laborers employed by the Richardson & Boynton Stove Works early this week the plant is closed to-day. About 650 employes were paid off. As if to emphasize the company's determination to hold out, the entrances to all the large buildings of the plant were boarded up.

The laborers were getting $1.82 for a ten-hour day. They demanded $2 for a nine-hour day and also the discharge of an unpopular Italian foreman, and changes in the ventilating and heating systems.

AUTO BUCKS LIKE A BRONCO.

Climbs Sidewalk, Demolishes a Post, and Then Chugs Away.

Bucking back and forth from one side of the street to another, an electric automobile scattered persons in West Fifty-second Street near Fifth Avenue, and jammed into the front steps of Thomas J. Keveney's house at 20 West Fifty-second Street, demolishing the railing. The machine also broke a stone post, and the resulting shock caused the cracking of several windows. Diners in the house got a scare.

Before servants or policemen could get to the machine, it backed again into the street, and, with great speed, shot into Fifth Avenue and went northward.

When the machine turned into Fifty-second Street persons noticed the chauffeur sending it from one side of the street to the other. Whether he was amusing himself or whether the machine was beyond his control could not be determined.

Mr. Keveney reported the matter to the police of the East Fifty-first Street station, and detectives were sent out to learn the owner and chauffeur of the machine.

TURKS TO ATTACK BULGARIA?

Report That They Want War—Sultan's Condition Worse.

PARIS, April 13.—The Memorial Diplomatique says it has learned that the illness of the Sultan of Turkey is rapidly becoming worse, and that he is most anxious concerning the revolutionary movement in Asia Minor.

His advisers see only one hope, and that is to provide an exterior diversion in the form of a war with Bulgaria. Trouble with that country would already have broken out but for the Sultan's fear that the Bulgarians, who are rapid mobilizers, would win the first success and that this would be followed by an insurrection throughout the whole of Asia Minor.

In the meanwhile, the paper asserts, the Turkish reserves are being called out and troops are being hastened to the frontier.

WOMAN BEATEN AND ROBBED.

Two Italians Arrested and Nearly $2,200 Recovered.

BREWSTERS, April 13.—Attacked by two Italians and beaten into unconsciousness, Mrs. Louis Leischa, the wife of an Italian laborer, was robbed to-day of $2,200 in bills which she carried under her belt in a small bag. She was in her home when the two men entered and struck her down. They were captured later at Carmel, N. Y., five miles from here.

The men said they were Mayta Malcove and Nicolas Petrone, and it is believed they formerly worked with the husband of the woman they robbed. Most of the money was recovered.

POST OFFICE SAFE CRACKED.

But the Money Was In the Postmaster's Stocking at His Home.

While a burglary early yesterday morning was searching industriously in the safe of the Rosedale (L. I.) Post Office, which he had cracked with an ordinary hammer, the Post Office receipts of the previous three days were snugly reposing in an old stocking in the Postmaster's closet.

"If they want to get the Post Office money, let 'em hunt for it," was the motto of Joseph Roeckel, the Postmaster, who had no great faith in safes, and especially in the safe in the Post Office, which occupies a corner of the Postmaster's son's grocery store on the Merrick Road.

The Baltimore a Mine Ship.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—The Bureau of Navigation has decided to convert the cruiser Baltimore, one of Dewey's fleet at the battle of Manila Bay, into a mine-planting ship.

THAW IS EXPECTED TO SHIFT LAWYERS

"No Change Yet," He Says, but Conference Will Be Held To-morrow.

HAS A TALK WITH DELMAS

Prisoner's Wife Only One of Family to Visit Him—Her Brother Asked Thaw for Aid.

It was strongly surmised yesterday that when next Harry K. Thaw faces a jury to answer for the murder of Stanford White, only one of his present counsel will be found by his side. Daniel O'Reilly has been the practical man in court and persona grata to the relatives of the defendant outside. It is understood that he has already been retained for the future proceedings.

So far, however, no definite action with regard to the other lawyers has been taken. Thaw himself gave out yesterday, through Mr. Peabody, this statement:

"There has not been any change of counsel yet."

When Mr. Hartridge was asked whether he was still in the case, he replied that he was, but he declined to discuss the events of the future. He was then asked about the position of Mr. Delmas, and he replied:

"Mr. Delmas was retained for the summing up, and this service he therefore performed. He has already been paid all that is due to him up to the present."

From this it was assumed that as the Californian had fulfilled his share of the contract it was by no means sure that he would be retained for like services again. He is not the attorney of record in the case, and there is no reason why he should have anything more to do with it unless he is specially retained.

Mr. Delmas visited Thaw in the Tombs yesterday morning and had a consultation with him, during part of which Evelyn Nesbit Thaw was present. According to some accounts, the interview was not particularly pleasant, but at its close Mr. Delmas gave out the following statement:

"It is not true that I have retired from the case, neither is it true that I have been asked to retire. There is not a word of truth in the rumor that I had a stormy interview with Mr. Thaw this morning. On the contrary, I had a very pleasant talk, part of which was in the presence of Mrs. Thaw, his wife."

Question of Bail Will Come Up.

There is to be a conference of counsel in the case to-morrow, in which no doubt the wishes of the Thaw family will be made known. Yesterday nothing was done by either side in the case. Counsel were suffering from the reaction after the long strain, and as there was no pressing business the lawyers took a rest.

The first thing counsel for Thaw, whoever they may be, will consider this week will be the possibility of getting him out on bail. Almost any sum would be cheerfully put up as bail by his family to secure his temporary freedom, and as soon as possible some move in this direction is expected. However, the District Attorney will resist it strongly.

Mr. Hartridge was asked yesterday about a rumor that in order to influence public opinion resort had been had to the stage. To educate the public feeling, it was alleged, a melodrama with its plot modeled closely on the lines of the Madison Square Garden tragedy, and called "The Millionaire's Revenge," had been produced at the Thalia Theatre, and a revival of "Mam'zelle Champagne," the piece which was being played when Stanford White was shot, was given at the Berkeley Lyceum. To finance these ventures, it was alleged, one of Thaw's counsel had expended $80,000, and that the defendants had criticised the bill.

"There has been no dispute about the expenditure of any money," was all Mr. Hartridge would say about that.

Lady Yarmouth and Insanity Plea.

He also denied that the reason why Mr. Delmas touched so lightly upon the insanity theory in his summing up was on account of the opposition of the Countess of Yarmouth to the prominence of this line of defense. In his opening speech Mr. Gleason laid a good deal of stress upon insanity, and declared that counsel for Thaw had no intention of going outside the law of the State of New York in arguing in his behalf. Yet Mr. Delmas, in his peroration, brought out strongly the "unwritten law," which, it has since come out, was not considered by the jury.

It had been rumored that Lady Yarmouth had strong objections to making out that there are hereditary tendencies toward insanity in her family. She hopes some day to be the mother of a member of the British House of Lords, and she fears that his succession might be invalidated if a family taint were proved. Mr. Hartridge denied that the Countess had interfered with the defense in any such way.

From the Hotel Lorraine no word came of the plans of the Thaws. Mrs. William Thaw refused herself to callers and would not even allow notes to be sent up. She did not visit the Tombs, but kept to her rooms all day. All that could be learned was that at present the members of the family have no intention of leaving the city.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw visited her husband early. She left the Lorraine a little after 9 o'clock looking worn and fagged out. There were dark circles under her eyes, and she looked as if she had been awake most of the night.

Thaw Comforts His Wife.

Thaw himself seemed to take the keen disappointment of a mistrial with astonishing resignation. He read the newspaper stories with avidity, and was particularly interested in the revelations of what took place in the jury room. When his wife came to him he did most of the comforting, and he explained to her a number of points which she did not understand.

Mrs. Thaw stayed with her husband until the last moment allowed. As she came down she met the reporters with her finger to her lips, to show that she did not wish to be interviewed.

"But there's one question you can answer, and you will probably want to," she was told. "Is it true that your doctor has ordered you out of the city?"

"Yes, I will answer that," she replied, drawing herself up with determination. "I'm going to stay by my husband's side, where I belong."

"Mr. Delmas has been dropped, has he not?" asked somebody else.

"Who told you that?" she asked quickly. "Anyhow, that's not a matter for me to discuss."

During the afternoon Thaw sent several messages to Daniel O'Reilly and refused to give out any further statements until he had conferred with him. However, the lawyer had left his office for the day and could not be located.

Mr. Jerome went off to Lakeville soon after luncheon. Before leaving he denied that he had any intention of agreeing with counsel for Thaw that the defendant should be sent to an asylum.

Young Nesbit Appealed to Thaw.

Counsel for Thaw gave out yesterday a letter which was written to the prisoner a few days ago by Howard Nesbit, brother of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw. This young man was for a time under subpoena by the District Attorney, and was present in the Criminal Court Building for a great part of the trial. He was not called, and once or twice made efforts to make up the coldness which exists between him and his sister. The letter read:

Dear Mr. Thaw: No doubt you will be surprised to see this letter from me, but I cannot help feel that it will be no more than right for me to make myself square with you and tell you fully how I feel toward you.

I wish to impress upon you the fact that when Mr. White was shot that I thought it would be a heroic act on my part to stand by the man whose memory to me was so precious. I believed him to be only one that was great, kind, good, and honorable.

To me he was a King, and he won my childish affection by his kindness toward me. If he was a bad man I did not know it, for I was only a child and was and could have been easily deceived as to his real nature.

When Mr. Jerome took my statement he only wanted to know all about you, White, and Florence. I told him what Florence told me—or at least was supposed to have told me. I will put it more strongly, and say she never told me anything against you that would tend to hurt you in any way. I lied, thinking it would help the man I thought was so good.

After Florence told her story on the stand, believe me, I was with her from that time on—heart and soul—I never intended to say one word against her if put on the stand—I would have forgotten everything I knew—I would have perjured myself out and out, if you wish to call it perjury.

I am not and was not afraid of Jerome. Another thing I wish you to bear in mind, and that is that I was influenced by artful and designing persons who urged me on to take the stand that I did. They are to be found in this city, and not far away, either.

I love and cherish Florence as any brother should, and it breake my heart to think I cannot see her. I want to see her and tell her how sorry I am. She would listen to me, I am sure.

I am very, very unhappy—in fact, I have made myself sick worrying, and I cry at night and cannot rest. I am frank and sincere with you. I do not seek to hide my feelings.

I believe you right and justified in doing what you did and you are now, in my estimation, more than a hero. I look upon you now as a man fully sane and capable of holding your own in every crisis.

I wrote to Florence telling her how sorry I was. I told her I wanted to stay here in the city with my roommates from college, but who have since returned, but she seems to be somewhat bitter at me yet and will not see me.

I asked her to let me have some money—$100—if she could spare it, so that I could pay some debts which I was forced to contract while here, but she answered that she didn't have any money. And so I must appeal to you to help me. Perhaps I was wrong in coming here, but my parents are responsible for that. The fact that I refused to go on the stand against you and my sister should be enough to show you that I am true to your cause.

I want the money to enable me to stay here until I can get a position and be independent of everybody else. Won't you help me? If you don't, I will be forced to write home for money, and I don't want to do that.

I am living at the St. Paul Hotel, Sixtieth Street and Columbus Avenue, and I owe money for my board. I also owe Assistant District Attorney Buckley $15, which I was forced to borrow from the clerk of the Hotel Martinique while the State kept me here. So you will see I am in a very bad fix.

If you fail me, I don't know what I'll do. I would rather kill myself than have to go to certain persons in this city for help, and I won't write home for the money. I have been so miserable at times that I have felt like ending it all. Please help me, as I helped you by not going on the stand. Yours sincerely,

HOWARD NESBIT.

$300,000 SPENT ON TRIAL.

Thaw Family's Share of This Estimated at $225,000.

Probably $300,000 is a conservative estimate of what the killing of Stanford White has cost the State of New York and the Thaw family. This far exceeds the amount expended upon the other trials, which have in recent years excited as much interest.

Roland B. Molineux was tried twice for murder. The first time he was convicted, the second time acquitted. The people spent $86,000, and it has been estimated that his father, Gen. Molineux, must have been out at least $100,000 before he saw his son walk out of court a free man.

Albert T. Patrick was convicted of murder. The State has already paid out $65,000 on this case and there is $15,000 in dispute with certain of the People's witnesses.

Nan Patterson was tried three times. The first resulted in a mistrial in consequence of the illness of a juror; the other two ended in disagreements. As the case was a straightforward one and did not need the employment of expert testimony, it cost comparatively little. The State got of with $8,500. What fees the lawyers for the defence received has never been revealed.

In the Thaw case expert testimony played a prominent part, and it is safe to estimate that, to prove himself sane, Thaw had to spend at least $30,000. His fees for lawyers were also large. It is believed that Mr. Delmas received a fee of $50,000, and the other four may be set down at $15,000 each. Then, in the hunting up of evidence and the employment of detectives for various purposes under Roger O'Mara, late Chief of Police at Pittsburg, and in such sundries as typewriting, another $50,000 may easily have been spent.

But before the counsel who have been defending him were retained, Black, Olcott, Gruber & Bonynge were employed, and they had other alienists to examine the defendant. In this false start probable $25,000 went.

The State has not spent so much, but cannot hope to escape with less than an outlay of $25,000, besides the salaries of the Justice, the District Attorney, his assistants, and the court officials for the three months of the trial. It is reckoned that each session of the Supreme Court costs the People $612 in the salaries of its officials, and this item alone would mount up to $40,000.

When the alienists, the cost of the keep of the jury at the Broadway Central Hotel, the witness fees, and the payments to jurors and talesmen is all counted in, it will appear that the County will have to pay out $75,000 for the trial. But then it has a well-regulated machine always ready for the prosecution and arraignment of prisoners, and to fight it the defense had to expend $225,000.

PERSONALITY OF THE JURORS.

The Only Unmarried Man Chosen Voted for Acquittal.

Much interest was displayed yesterday in the personality of the Thaw jurors in connection with their votes. The jurors who on the last ballot voted for conviction of murder in the first degree were:

DEMING B. SMITH, foreman, a retired umbrella manufacturer, living at 253 West 111th Street; married; 50 years old.

GEORGE PFAFF, a dealer in machinery supplies, living at 837 West 148th Street; in business at 122 Centre Street; married; 34 years old.

CHARLES H. FECKE, manager of second-class department of the Cunard Steamship Line, living at 601 West 135th Street; married; 57 years old.

HARRY C. BREARLEY, in the advertising business at 17 Stats Street, living at 19 East Sixteenth Street; married; 34 years old.

CHARLES D. NEWTON, a retired manufacturer, living at 267 West 134th Street; married; aged 60.

JOSEPH B. BOLTON, clerk, living at 1,187 Boston Road; 53 years old. Mr. Bolton's wife died while the trial was in progress.

BERNARD GERSTMAN, manager of the Gerard Woolen Mills, living at 49 East Eighty-eighth Street; married; about 34 years old.

The jurors who on the last ballot voted for acquittal on the ground of insanity were:

OSCAR A. PINK, grain and hay salesman, living at 447 West 145th Street; married; aged 46.

HENRY C. HARNEY, manager of a piano warehouse, living at 132d Street and Brook Avenue; married; 55 years old.

MALCOLM S. FRASER, underwear salesman at 550 Broadway, living at 142 West 125th Street; married; aged 49.

JOHN S. DENNEE, freight agent of the Southern Railroad, living at 217 East Thirty-third Street; unmarried; about 35 years old.

JUROR BREARLEY'S STORY.

An Unusual Piece of Work Done Under Remarkable Conditions.

The story of the proceedings of the jury in the Thaw trial with the analysis of the reasons which caused the twelve men to disagree, written by Harry C. Brearley, Juror No. 6, for yesterday's TIMES, aroused much favorable comment among lawyers. While it was considered, in itself, a remarkable piece of work, the clearness of its statements was the more astonishing when the circumstances attending its composition were considered.

Mr. Brearley came to the Times Building at 6:30 P. M. on Friday. He had then had only two hours' sleep in the preceding sixty. He dictated the statement straight away, and for about the first half of it was able to keep the trend of his argument without much difficulty. Then tired nature asserted itself, and it was only by a remarkable exhibition of will power that he was able to complete the work.

The dictation was completed about 10:30 o'clock, but even then Mr. Brearley did not seek the repose he needed. He set to work immediately to revise the article on the trial as seen from the jury box, which is printed in another part of to-day's issue. The strain under which he was laboring was so great that when this was completed he was unable to sleep. He was out again early yesterday morning, and said that he had only obtained three hours' sleep.

Discussing Mr. Brearley's review of the deliberations of the jury Henry C. McPike, partner of Mr. Delmas, said yesterday:

"I have read Mr. Brearly's statement as contained in THE TIMES, and can say that, from its length and exhaustiveness, I consider it unusual. I have often heard statements made by jurors after a mistrial, and, indeed, have been anxious to obtain them, but I cannot recall any previous instance where a juror has gone into a full narration of what has taken pince in the jury room, or an analysis of his own and other jurors' feelings."

JERSEY'S QUICKER JUSTICE.

Lawyers Think Thaw Could Have Been Tried There in Much Less Time.

Leading members of the New Jersey bar and newspapers in different parts of the State make interesting comments on the Thaw trial. The lawyers who are well versed in criminal law say that had Thaw been tried in New Jersey not half the time ould have been consumed nor would the trial have cost the State a quarter of the sum New York must pay for the prnsecution of Thaw.

They contend that the New York law ought to be amended so as to exclude all expert testimony as to a prisoner's sanity except that given by an official commission appointed by the court.

ENGLISH RECORDER'S VIEW.

Tells Grand Jury the British Trust Juries More Than Americans Do.

LONDON, April 13.—There was indirect reference to the Thaw trial in New York at the opening of the Guildford Quarter Sessions to-day. The Recorder, George Cave, M. P., in charging the Grand Jury, said the British were apt to congratulate themselves on comparing the English and American criminal systems. Counsel in this country were disposed to save the time of the court, and there was a great tradition that prosecuting counsel should not struggle to obtain a conviction. The British trusted their juries more than did the Americans.

The Recorder added that he hoped that the proposed Criminal Appeal Court would not give the rich an advantage over the poor.

PLEASURE HAS ITS PRICE.

The Lesson a Rockefeller Pastor Draws from the Thaw Case.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, April 13.—The Rev. Dr. Charles A. Eaton, pastor of John D. Rockefeller's Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, in a sermon on the Thaw case, declared to-night that all concerned got what they deserved. Continuing, he said:

"It announces once more the fact that the devil is a hard taskmaster. Everything in this world has its price. Pleasures that degrade and dwarf the soul must be paid for. There is no evading the debt. Hell and Heaven both begin in this world, and even though the sinner succeeds in hiding for a time his crimes, their blight and ruin fall upon his own spirit.

"It shows the dastardly meanness of men who, occupying a high social position, still use their money, talent, and influence for self-gratification and acknowledge no obligation to their age and country of self-discipline and self-surrender. It warns every one of us to walk carefully, think humbly of ourselves and charitably of our neighbors. The principals in this sordid tragedy are just ordinary human beings. They chose the way of sin and walked gladly in it, and have come to the end.

"It is a lesson for parents to pay more attention to making their children rich in morals and less to the question of making them rich in money. It warns all who are tempted to turn back now before it is too late."

THE ENGLISH PRESS.

It Finds Much to Scold About in the Thaw Mistrial.

To the English papers, with the rarest exceptions, the Thaw verdict seems to argue anything but good of Americans and American laws. Some of them speak with a sort of fierce joy, as of long cherished suspicion agreeably justified; others with a fine air of smugness, as if moved by sorrow, not anger.

The Times has the following:

"If Thaw had been a poor man a verdict would have been given a day or two after the jury was impaneled. The trial brings to light facts which explain in some degree the jealousy of great fortunes newly acquired. One gets a glimpse, and not a pleasant one, of wealth without elegance or refinement, luxury without polish, culture, or attraction; much costly eating and drinking, and fine clothes with coarse manners.

"The booby millionaire is not unknown. He is generally the successor of the self-made millionaire. He puts with both hands into rapid circulation his inherited fortune. Much more mischievous and probably more responsible for the feeling of animosity and jealousy, unmistakably strong in America, is a class of very rich men, who seem to know nothing of the duties of wealth or of the graces that often come in its train, and seek to escape sheer boredom in unrefined excitements."

It contends that the issue before the jury was quite simple, calls the trial a public nuisance and a spectacle which every right-thinking person longed to see the end of, and says that if proceedings in courts of justice had necessarily to be such as were seen in this case they would be as mischievous as the crimes intended to be punished.

"It would not be surprising," says The Daily News, "if a Latin community, which does not make professions of severe puritanical virtue, had made a heroine of Mrs. Thaw and condoned Thaw's loose life. The amazing thing is to find this phenomenon in a country which has just hounded Maxim Gorky from its shores.

"The American press forbid the performance of Shaw's play, yet print with every noisome detail full reports of this painful and disgusting trial. Both aberrations betray undisciplined sentimentality, but worse than the sentimentality is the power of money to override the puritanism which is still the dominant note in American public opinion. One scarcely knows whether to be more amazed at the insincerity of such a press or at the gullibility of such a public.

"The total result of an expenditure of money, false sentiment, and mercenary skill without parallel in the recent history of civilization, is simply this: that man may henceforward murder in America unpunished provided always his crime is interesting and he himself is a millionaire."

The Daily Mail remarks that little of that hustle, in which Americans are popularly supposed to excel, was shown, and adds: "For dispatch we must look to the English courts and their more up to date methods."

The Standard says: "Seldom has justice been so flagrantly abused as by the questions Jerome allowed to be put to Mrs. Thaw. He has been professionally punished by the assurance that nothing but his own misconduct of the case saved the prisoner from condemnation. It wiped out in the mind of a sentimental but acute people the contempt excited by the trash in which Mr. Delmas indulged and the gush of greasy sentiment about Thaw's girl wife.

"What puzzles the average sensible Englishman is how the average sensible American can tolerate the waste of public time and money by lawyers when their clients have command of millions, and how newspapers of a certain class are allowed day by day to prejudge an issue of life or death.

"Unfortunately, although our legal procedure is short, sharp, and summary, we are not in a position to censure the maudlin weakness of American sentiment. The agitation here for the reprieve of Rayner was allowed to prevail, and he escaped the gallows because it was claimed he was only a parricide."

The Express finds that the trial and its outcome has hurt American prestige. "It is signal proof," it says, "of the utter inefficiency of American statesmanship to evolve a practical legal system. It is a disastrous instance of trial by the amateur judgment of a democracy. Law, dignity, and common sense have all been wanting."

The Morning Leader says that the jury has really reflected the verdict of the world, upon which the human tragedy beneath has produced like utterly contradictory impressions.

The Chronicle praises the prolonged endeavors of the jury to reach a verdict, admitting that no British jury would have shown like patience.

"There have been features," it adds, "which present American practice in an unfavorable light compared with ours, but the Judge's charge conformed to the best standard of any land, while the eloquence of the American bar was conspicuously illustrated."

"It seems to us," says The Telegraph, "a travesty upon the passionate regard of the American Nation for the purity of home life and the honor of women to represent Thaw as the champion of the unwritten law that a man may take vengeance in his own hands in defense of the sanctities of his hearth.

"Public conscience may condone private vengeance for such acts, but the hearth that has been violated must have been kept tolerably clean before. What is disquieting is not the revelation of vice, for the lower side of human nature is much the same everywhere, but the mawkish desire to make a virtuous hero out of a degenerate criminal."

VALUE OF EXPERT TESTIMONY

The Theme of David McClure at an Engineers' Dinner.

That the testimony of experts, particularly of alienists, is not of much value in courts of law was the burden of a speech delivered last night by David McClure at the Hotel Astor, at the third annual reunion dinner of the Graduated Civil Engineers of Columbia University. Mr. McClure was Chairman of the commission in lunacy which recently decided that Harry K. Thaw is sane. He made it plain that he was referring to the Thaw trial, though he did not cite it by name.

"In a recent case in which I was involved," he said, "to decide whether a certain person was sane enough or not to know what he was about, I heard distinguished alienists assert that a single motion of the hand proved the defendant insane, while equally distinguished members of the profession asserted that the same motion proved his sanity. I urge engineers and lawyers against sinking to that stage of their professions which in medicine is paralleled by the alienists. A bill is at present before the Legislature to restrict the testimony of alienists. No such measure has ever been taken against any other profession."

One hundred engineers were present at the dinner. Daniel E. Moran of the Foundation Company was toastmaster. Other speakers were: Dr. Rudolf Tombo, Jr., Registrar of Columbia University; J. Waldo Smith, Chief Engineer of the Board of Water Supply; Nelson P. Lewis, Chief Engineer of the Board of Estimate, and Walter H. Sears, Chief Engineer of the Aqueduct Commission.

WHITE DENIES PLAN TO BLOCK DEWEY

"took for a time a hostile shape, but from first to last the attitude of the German Government toward us was entirely correct.

"The fact that both the Emperor and Chancellor von Bülow and also Baron von Richtsofen, who at that time was an important personage at the Foreign Office, realized that Spain had forfeited her colonial possessions by two centuries of insane statesmanship, I think that their feeling as regards us was that we must have our way in the matter.

"My chief efforts at Berlin during this critical period," Mr. White continued, "were devoted principally to allaying the very general dislike of the United States which existed among the people at large and to explain away sundry foolish utterances and actions of convivial people in our own country.

"The general tone of the German press was very bitter. Especially was that true regarding the Berlin papers. The principal paper in the German capital contained daily diatribes about America and everything American. This journal declared among other things that Spain was bound to win because her navy was manned by patriotic Spanish sailors, while on our ships were mongrel crews from all nations. Then it said that everybody knew that the Spaniards were honest, and that we Americans were not. When the shooting began it would be found, they said, that American naval guns had been made out of pewter and that our bombs were filled with sawdust. All the utterances of the American press against Germany were thus matched by the German press against America.

"There were only two newspapers of any importance in all Germany that were not against us. One was Die Nation, edited at Berlin by Theodore Barth. The other was the Frankfurter Zeitung. It was only natural that it should be so. To Germans in general the struggle seemed simply the effort of a powerful nation, confident in its own strength, to tear away the most valuable possessions of a weaker power.

"Then, too, there was a great deal of feeling in Germany for the Queen Regent of Spain—a German woman who was fighting a desperate battle to preserve the throne for her young son, and so I never particularly blamed the German press. It was the most natural thing in the world that they should take that view of the situation, the United States seeming to them a great buccaneering power, which, under the mask of philanthropy, was seeking to rob a small European power of its most valuable foreign possessions. Besides this, I remembered that during our struggle for National existence—during the civil war—Germany had stood by us."

Discussing the attitude of the German Government, Mr. White said:

"So far as the German Government is concerned—especially as represented by the Emperor and Chancellor von Bülow—I am certain no such hostile feeling existed. They had their own grievances against Spain. I think the murder of that noted German correspondent some years before, which had been so severely punished by Bismarck, had left a very deep unfavorable impression in the official German mind as regards Spanish methods. Then, too, they could not fail to despise the foolish policy of Spain generally.

"As for the Diedericks episode, of which so much has been made, I am confident that in his blunt German sailor manner he imagined that when he saw a large foreign power in the way to gain possession of the Philippines he conceived it his duty in a vague sort of fashion to 'butt in to protect German interests.'"

"Were ever any representations made to the German Government by you on behalf of the United States in connection with the Diedericks incident?" Mr. White was asked.

No Direct Representations.

"I cannot recall that any direct representations were ever made by me to the Foreign Office in regard to Admiral Diedericks and his doing in Manila," Mr. White replied. "None seemed necessary. Neither the Emperor nor Chancellor von Bülow wished for any quarrel with us, and the Foreign Office, both under Bülow and Richtsofen, was, I think, much more inclined toward us than toward Spain."

"That was shown," Mr. White went on, "when I called the attention of the Foreign Office to a certain Spanish ship, supposed to be carrying contraband of war and just about to sail from Hamburg. The Government office might well have pleaded our own American doctrine against me, but they did not, and the ship was seized and examined even after she had reached the high seas. I have always regarded the act of Admiral Diedericks as simply a blunder on his part, which did not in the slightest degree commit the Government at Berlin. In my opinion the German Imperial Government—from the Emperor down—saw that the day of Spain's colonial sway was done, that her colonial policy was hopelessly inadequate, and that the United States was bound to succeed.

"Under the circumstances there was no reason for making any representations regarding Admiral Diedericks's conduct. A formal attack on him might have aroused partisanship and led to resentment, whereas with the whole business officially ignored by our Government there resulted just the right sort of action on the part of the German Government to prevent any further blunder by their Admiral and to allay ill-feeling."

PURSUED BY 200 WOMEN.

Salesman Charged with $60 Theft Captured and Locked Up.

Two hundred Williamsburg women participated yesterday morning in a spirited chase after Samuel Friedman, charged with robbing Miss Rose Roessner of 96 Moore Street of $60. The fugitive was a salesman of 79 Debevoise Street. Miss Roessner came to America about two months ago and went to board at 61 Graham Avenue. She became acquainted with Friedman, also a boarder there.

The young woman kept the bag in which she had her money tied to a gold neck chain. One night about three weeks ago Friedman, it was alleged, invaded her room while she was asleep and took the bag containing the $60.

Miss Roessner woke up just as the intruder was leaving her room and made an outcry, which awakened the house. She said she recognized Friedman. When search was made for him it was found that he had disappeared.

Miss Roessner kept up a constant search for the man. Recently she moved to 96 Moore Street, and yesterday morning, while out shopping she saw Friedman coming toward her. As soon as the salesman observed Miss Roessner he turned and ran away.

Miss Roessner started in pursuit, and presently dozens of women took up the chase. Screaming loudly they chased Friedman up one street and down another. He finally ran into a tenement house, at 59 Graham Avenue, where he hid in a coal bin.

He was found there by some of the women who hauled him out and kept him a prisoner until a policeman appeared. He was taken to the Stagg Street Police Station, and later arraigned and committed in default of bail, for a hearing on Tuesday. He denied having robbed Miss Roessner.

PLAN TO OUST THE U. G. I.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 13.—Announcement was made to-day of a new plan to terminate the United Gas Improvement Company's lease of the city gas works, and to relet them to another corporation which has just been formed.

Simultaneously, applications were filed at Harrisburg for charters for two companies, both to be controlled by the persons behind the main proposition. One is called the Sterling Gas, Light, and Power Company and the other is the Pocahontas Gas Company. The nominal capital of each is $10,000. About a fortnight ago a charter for the Pennsylvania Gas and Power Company was granted at Dover by the Secretry of State of Delaware. It is admitted by the promoters of the new gas plan that the interests behind this company are substantially identical with those in the projected companies referred to, and that the concern incorporated at Dover was designed as a holding company for the other two.

An ordinance embodying the new plan will be presented to Councils next Thursday.

USED AN HONEST NAME.

Bookkeeper with an Alleged System for Thieving Arrested.

Detective Sergeant Oppenheim of Inspector McLaughlin's staff arrived from Philadelphia last night with Ernest H. Belmont of 714 Buttonwood Street, Philadelphia, who was arrested in that city on a charge of raising checks to the amount of $1,000, signed by Watson, Flagg & Co., engineers, of 27 and 29 Thames Street.

According to Oppenheim, Belmont was employed by the firm as a bookkeeper and raised and passed the checks.

According to Detective Oppenheim, Belmont confessed that his scheme was to go to a place and ask for employment as a bookkeeper. He had a brother who was a bookkeeper. Whenever his brother, who was an honest bookkeeper, left a position Belmont would go to another city and ask for employment. He would work under his brother's name and give the name of the firm his brother had worked for as referenee. Thus he always got good references and obtained the confidenee of the firm he intended to cheat.

Belmont was locked up in Police Headquarters.

STEVENS ANSWERS HIS CANAL CRITICS

Home from Panama, He Says Only Personal Reasons Caused His Resignation.

AVERS ALL IS HARMONY

The Canal Work Is Making Fine Progress, but He Needs a Long Rest.

John F. Stevens, who recently resigned as chief engineer of the Panama Canal, arrived yesterday on the Panama liner Panama from Colon. Mr. Stevens was not willing at first to discuss his resignation just after the time he was stated to have received unlimited power as builder of the canal and Canal Commissioner. He declared that he now contemplated taking a long rest abroad. He was glad to give up his duties. He said he had been greatly flattered by the warmth of the farewell reception given him by 8,000 canal employes when he left Colon.

Mr. Stevens was informed that a great many versions had been given as to his leaving the post of chief engineer of the canal, and after his arrival at the Waldorf he issued the following statement:

"In view of the many ridiculous reasons given by various newspapers as to the causes which led to my retirement as chief engineer of the Panama Canal, possibly in justice to myself, as well as to the few who may care to be set right, a denial of these alleged reasons may be in order.

Not Asked to Resign.

"I was not asked to resign. On the contrary, the highest position, authority, and consequent responsibility next to that of the Secretary of War was not only offered, but urged upon me.

"I never had any clash with any of my superior officers, and their attitude was always in support of my efforts.

"The knowledge of and the connection of the Washington officials with the actual work on the Isthmus was too small to offer many chances for disagreement. I have never opposed doing the work by contract; in fact, a year ago last January, while in Washington and at other times since, I advocated such policy. The plan of contract under which bids were received was formulated by myself in July last, only one month after Congress had decided upon the type of canal. I did oppose letting the contract to the Oliver syndicate for good reasons, but the statement that I have even opposed the letting of any contract is false. I did not cable or write Washington that I would resign if the contract was let.

"The matter of the contract had in no way anything to do with my leaving the service of the Canal Commission. The statement of a disgruntled bidder, that because I opposed the letting of the contract I 'was fired,' is a fabrication, pure and simple. I did not threaten to resign if I was ordered to Washington during the last days of Congress, or at any time.

"While I should have preferred to remain on the Isthmus as long as I was connected with the work, and while I might in my own mind have questioned the wisdom of the order, I should have promptly obeyed it without any conditions. I did not leave the work to play golf, to read books, nor for any such fantastic notions. The act was not prompted by jealousy of any one getting credit for my work. In the position I would have held had I remained there would have been no one to have been jealous of.

No Bluff for Roosevelt.

"I did not attempt to bluff the President, and one of the happiest moments of my life was the one when I found I could soon be relieved of the work. I made no suggestion as to leaving until I knew the work was in shape to leave and that the organization, personnel, plant, and system which have been evolved made up such a working machine that no failure or serious delay can occur with a continuation of direct business methods.

"My reasons for leaving were largely personal anad perfectly satisfactory to myself. The act was one purely of my own volition.

"The statements emanating from Washington 'news bureaus,' alleging anything contrary to the above, are wholly flights of fancy and the ponderous comments of certain space writers are exactly of the same class. The newspapers which print such rot are, in their self-appointed capacity of censors of other people's morals and ethics, simply indulging in the time-honored but wholly harmless amusement of 'barking at a knot.'"

Mr. Stevens was told that recently it had been said by persons returning from the Canal Zone that he had resigned because he had come to believe that the canal would never be completed.

"That's nonsense," he replied, "the canal will be completed just as sure as you are alive. It is a great work, and it is being done just as fast as your great works up here are being built."

When asked whether there was any truth in the statement that suitable foundations could not be built for the great locks, Mr. Stevens said that the foundations were being built and that on completion they would be as strong as any in this city.

"Will you see the President when you go to Washington?" he was asked.

"That I can't say," he replied. "I shall be there if he wants to see me."

John F. Stevens, Jr., accompanied his father back from Colon, and both were met on arrival by Mrs. Stevens.

STEAMSHIPS RACE TO PORT.

Campania Gets to Her Pier an Hour Ahead of La Savoie—Talk by Wireless.

The French liner La Savoie and the Cunarder Campania arrived in Quarantine only a few minutes apart late yesterday afternoon. The former sailed from Havre on last Saturday, and the Campania left Liverpool the same day. Both vessels got well away from land on Sunday morning, and about the same time got into wireless communication with each other.

The affair soon began to be a race for this port, and the instruments were kept busy keeping up a wireless conversation and discussion of the chances of each vessel reaching this port ahead of the other. The Campania and the French steamer were in wireless communication practically throughout the voyage.

The Campania won, getting to her pier nearly an hour ahead of her rival. La Savoie had bad luck in getting caught in a snowstorm which the Campania just missed. She lost so much time groping about in the heavy weather that the English vessel was enabled to take a lead which the other could not overcome. Both vessels reported bad weather.

The passengers discussed the Thaw case, and whether they would arrfive beforc the case went to the jury, and the probable verdict. They got a wireless flash to the effect that there had been a disagreement.

Among those arriving on the Campania were:

Mr. and Mrs. James Alexander, R. Noel Cripps, Capt Pitt, Hamlet Kent, Mr. and Mrs. John Lane, Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Olcott, Mrs. B. H. Spalding, S. Terano, G. V. Washington and Mrs. J. B. Watt and Miss Watt. Mrs. Watt is the wife of the Captain of the Carmania.

On La Savoie came:

THE EVENING POST MOVES.

Has a Dinner, and Issues a Supplement to Celebrate the Event.

The Evening Post issued yesterday a 30-page illustrated supplement, describing its new home at 20-22-24 Vesey Street, into which it has just moved. The new building of the Post is only a block and a half distant from the old home of the paper, at Broadway and Fulton Street.

Robert D. Kohn, the architect, in designing the building, first made a critical study of the most modern of the newspaper buildings in the United States. It is a steel skeleton building, thirteen stories above ground, with two basement floors. Of the fifteen stories the Post reserves for its own use the four top stories, a third of the street floor, and the two basements. The color scheme of the structure is gray and bronze, giving an impression similar to that obtained in some of the new business structures in Fifth Avenue.

In the supplement issued yesterday, the history of the building from the digging of the first spadeful of dirt for the foundations to its completion, is told in detail, with illustrations. The supplement also contains a great deal of information about the history of the Post from its establishment to the present day. Cartoons of the late Thomas Nast and photographs of the early editors of the Post also appear, among the latter being those of William Leggett, editor in 1829; Wendell Phillips Garrison, Alexander Hamilton, who was one of the founders of the publication; ohn Bigelow, William Cullen Bryant, Parke Goodwin, Horace White, Carl Schurz, Henry Villard, and Edwin Lawrence Godkin.

Other illustrations depict the early history of the lower section of the city. There are also photographs of many of the older employes of the paper, including those of Morris Van Vliet, superintendent of the Post composing room, and Robert Davis, a compositor, who is the oldest of the Post employes, and all in the service of the paper.

Last night the entire Post staff, including trustees, editors, compositors, pressmen, business department officials, and office boys, attended a dinner in the new building. Including forty guests, headed by Indian Commisioner Francis E. Loupp, all graduates of the Evening Post staff, editor in chief, presided, and, after dinner, there were speeches and a play, given by members of the staff, entitled "Every Post," based on the morality play, "Evcryman." A feature of the evening was the presentation of gold medals and gifts by the trustees to fourteen employes of the paper, including John oYung, foreman of the press room, who has been with the Evening Post since 1862, Morris Van Vliet, superintendent of the composing rooms, and Rohert Davis, who entered the service of the Evening Post sixty-six years ago and has never known any other employer. With two exceptions, all of these fourteen men have sepnt more than thirty years in the Post's service.

LAWYER SLEUTH TRAPS HOTEL CLERK

Blumenthal Gets Important Evidence in Contest for McGarren Estate.

SECOND MARRIAGE DISPUTED

By Trick Lawyer Gets at Atlantic City Hotel Books of 1903—Says It Proves Widow's Claim.

Friends of Daniel Blumenthal, a lawyer of 35 Nassau Street, are advising him to take up private detective work in addition to his law practice. Mr. Blumenthal has just returned from a sleuthing tour to Atlantic City, where, disguised as a "man about town" from the West, he procured evidence which he says proves beyond doubt, that Mrs. Hester McGarren of this city is the lawful widow of the late Alexander McGarren, who, when ho died in June, 1905, left an estate valued at about $675,000.

Mr. McGarren is also survived by a large number of nephews and nieces, who are trying to get possession of his estate, asserting taht after the annulment of his marriage to Mrs. McGarren in 1901, he had never remarried her. Mr. Blumenthal is now in possession of evidence indicating that the couple were remarried and has asked Supreme Court Justice Bischoff to appoint a commission to go to Atlantic City and examine the 1903 register of the Hotel Marlborough there, which contains the names of Mr. and Mrs. McGarren, written by Mr. McGarren himself.

It was Mr. Blumenthal's second visit to Atlantic City relative to the McGarren estate. On the first trip he went under his own name, but failed to obtain results. Then he decided to turn sleuth and went back as the "sport" from the West. He registered at the Marlborough under an assumed name. He hired an automobile that the hotel employés thought was his own, and spent money freely buying champagne and 25-cent cigars for everybody connected with the hotel.

A few nights ago Mr. Blumenthal decided to play his trump card. Accordingly he told one of the clerks that he wished he could get the room he had in 1903. The clerk said he did not remember that Mr. Blumenthal had been a guest of the house so far back.

"Oh, yes, I was," replied Mr. Blumenthal, "and I had the dandiest sort a room facing the ocean."

Then Mr. Blumenthal suggested that the clerk bring out the registered of June, 1903. The unsuspecting clerk produced it and told Mr. Blumenthal to find the registry.

Mr. Blumenthal says he found the names of Mr. and Mrs. McGarren and made a transcript of them. Then he gave the book back to the clerk and confessed why he had wanted it. The manager of the hotel came in and there was a lively scene whereupon Mr. Blumenthal decided taht it was about time for him to leave.

On Friday, Henry McGoughran, Administrator of the M Garren estate, appeared before Surrogate Thomas for the purpose of filing his final accounting. Surrogate Thomas gave Mr. Blumenthal fifteen days in which to file objections.

Mrs. McGarren was the divorced wife of Henry Schuhlein of Illinois when she married Mr. McGarren in Louisville in 1898. Previously Mr. McGarren got an opinion from Judge Humphrey of Louisville that Mrs. Schuhlein's California divorce was legal. Three years later McGarren had the marriage annulled in this State, on the ground that the Schuhlein divorce was illegal. The couple had separated and Mrs. McGarren knew nothing of the annulment decree until two years later.

In the meantime the McGarrens became reconciled and, Mrs. McGarren asserts, were remarried, went to Atlantic City and stopped at the Hotel Marlborough.

The McGarren estate consists of about $225,000 in personnl property and about $450,000 in real estate in this city. In the personnl property are many works of arts, including paintings by Millet, Rousseau, Meissonier, Gainsorough, and Masson's portraits of Napoleon and the Empress Josephine.

KELSEY GETS ORDER IN RECEIVERSHIP

$3,131 Surcharged to His Account as Receiver for Insurance Company.

ASSETS ARE IN VIRGINIA

Undiscovered, Says Lawyer Johnson, Until After the Manhattan's Affairs Were Settled.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 13.—The case of Otto Kelsey as receiver of the Manhattan Fire Insurance Company was heard before Justice Fitts in the Supreme Court ebambers to-day.

An application was made by Russell S. Johnson, as attorney for Mr. Kelsey, to have the accounts of the receiver surcharged with $3,131.50, representing assets in Virginia. It was contended by Mr. Jackson that at the time the affairs were closed those assets had not been discovered. The order was granted.

Mr. Johnson and ex-Justice Hasbrouck were in charge of the affairs of Mr. Kelsey up to the time Mr. Hasbrouck was appointed a Supreme Court Justice, and after that Mr. Johnson had entire charge.

Mr. Hasbrouck said he had received an order from Mr. Kelsey to take charge of these matters in the future and relieve Mr. Johnson of the work.

The Attorney General's office, which has been investigating the accounts of Mr. Kelsey, approved the orders.

Mr. Johnson declared that he had been reserving these assets in trust for the account of a firm of Virginia lawyers, one of whom, he said, had committed suicide since the receivership began. He joined with Alfred Hayes, Jr., attorney for Edward P. Ward, Mr. Kelsey's successor in the receivership, in the motion to add these assets to the account of Mr. Kelsey as receiver.

The affidavit of Mr. Kelsey, who surrendered the receivership shortly after his appointment as Superintendent of Insurance, declared that he had many official duties to perform aside from those incumbent upon him as receiver of this company; that therefore he had been obliged to rely upon his clerks, employes, and attorneys for many things; that he believed when he reposed the attorneyship in Mr. Johnson that the reputation and standing of the latter warranted absolute confidence in him.

Mr. Hasbrouck, who was formerly a partner of Mr. Johnson, declared in his ow naffidavit that he had nothing to do with this receivership as its attorney after he became a Supreme Court Justice, excepting on a few occasions when he appeared in court for his partner, Mr. Johnson. He declared that Mr. Kelsey had dischardged his duties to the court with honesty, prudence, and fidelity. He said he submitted his affidavit solely as a protection to his own professional reputation.

Justice Fitts further postponed the matter of confirming the report of the referee, W. M. K. Olcott, upon the Kelsey receivership account until May 25.

DICK'S FORTUNES IN FORAKER FIGHT

Junior Senator Has no Inclination to Jump on the Taft Wagon.

FIGHT FOR THE MACHINE

Victory in Ohio for the Secretary of War Means the Downfall of the Present State Leader.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—Senator Dick to-day set at rest rumors that he was planning a flying leap into the Taft bandwagon. A dispatch from Columbus published here this morning told of his coming desertion of Foraker with a wealth of detail. "Nonsense," said Dick when this was put up to him. "I am going to Ohio next week to take an active part in the campaign in support of Senator Foraker."

The Senator explained that he did not understand that he was to take charge of headquarters, but he indicated very clearly that this was a matter in which he would consult the wishes of Senator Foraker. In short, Senator Dick occupies the position of Chief of Staff in the Foraker forces. He is trusted entirely with that practical organization work for which Foraker has never shown either liking or aptitude. Nor has he been recently promoted to this position. Arthur Winter Foraker has been sending to Dick his own personal friends who came to Washington either job hunting or to report on the condition of the Senatorial fence. They had a fairly good understanding prior to the fight against both in the Dayton convention last Summer, which finally welded them together in bonds of self-interest. Their position can be stated as the time honored one, where they must from the political standpoint "either hang together or hang separately."

There is enough evidence that many lieutenants of both Senators have not liked this situation. It galled Foraker men who came here to confer with their chief when he turned them over to Dick, the man they had been taught to consider their arch enemy. Old members of the Hanna-McKinley faction have not all been enthusiastic about following Dick into an offensive and defensive treaty with the Foraker camp. It looks from here as if these reports that Dick would climb into the Taft bandwagon, came from some of these disgruntled Hanna men, who put their hopes into circulation for facts accomplished.

They want to see the old Hanna organization rid itself of responsibility for Foraker and adopt Taft as their candidate. Otherwise they fear to see this old organization, for which they have so much affection, wrecked on the rocks. But the relations between the two Senators, as seen here, and the opposition confronting both of them, makes it very plain that so far as Dick shall have a say, the old Hanna organization must go along with the Foraker organization and the combination becoms the Senatorial organization.

There was a time when Dick might have liked to pull through with a compromise which would save Foraker his Senate seat and Dick the State machine. That is now too late. Dick cannot now surrender if he would. The success of the Taft movement would mean turning over the State organization, the Chairmanship of the State Executive Committee, to Arthur I. Vorys, Taft's manager. Dick could not only expect no support from the Taft crowd for re-election when his term expires, but he knows they have an axe sharpening for his official head. Burton is their candidate for his office. But the office itself would mean little to Dick without the headship of the State Executive Committee, which gives him his State machine and makes him what of a power he is. He has no longer a machine of Federal office holders, thanks to President Roosevelt.

The fight this Summer by the Taft wing of the party is not only for the elimination of Foraker, but for the ultimate elimination of Dick as well. In Columbus last Summer Burton said the reform of the party must begin with the elimination of Dick. Is Dick then for Foraker? Is he for Dick? Well, he is, rather.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, April 13.—Senator Foraker has now had the greater part of two days in which to familiarize himself with the local situation in connection with the contest now on between himself and Secretary Taft. He spent a busy day receiving callers. It is understood that in about a week he will begin his speechmaking in the State.

Charles P. Taft, manager of his brother's political affairs, declared to-day that he was well satisfied with the outlook. He said the way the Secretary's candidacy was spreading and growing in strength was little short of marvelous. Concerning Senator Dick's announcement Mr. Taft said: "I rather expected that. I scarcely see how he could do otherwise."

TIFFANY & CO. WIN A POINT.

Stay Granted in Federal Case to Recover Extra Duty on Pearls.

A decision of far-reaching importance to importers of jewelry and precious stones was made yesterday by Judge Lacombe in the United States Circuit Court when Tiffany & Co. was granted a stay in proceedings instituted by the Government to recover extra duties amounting to $8,122 on fifty-nine pearls intended for a necklace.

The decision also has a direct bearing on the forms of customs procedurs to be observed in instances where disputes arise between the Government and importers. The ruling of the court means that where an action is brought by the United States for duties on imported merchandise, the importers' remedy is not to pay the duties and then proceed to recover them through proceedings before the Board of General Appraisers, but the action may be defended on the ground that the duties were not legally assessed.

The controversy between Tiffany & Co. and the Government, which had its inception in 1902, has been watched with keen interest in its various stages of litigation. When the pearls arrived in New York N. N. Stranahan, the Collector of the Port, assessed duty at the rate of 10 per cent. under the provision in the Dingley tariff for "pearls in their natural state, not strung or set." The firm paid the duties, aggregating $1,629.40, and obtained possession of the gems.

About a year later the Collector, having been informed that the pearls had been matched in Paris for the purpose of making a necklace, made a reliquidation of the entry and demanded duty under the provision in the law for "pearls strung."

The necklace, said to possess a foreign value of between $16,000 and $20,000, was understood to have been imported by Tiffany & Co. for a wealthy New Yorker. On the basis of 60 per cent., the duty demanded by the Government reached $8,122. The importers declined to pay the extra assessment and requested the Collector to send the firm's protest to the Board of Appraisers for adjudication as to the classification of the pearls.

Collector Stranahan refused to transmit the protest, insisting that the decision of the Collector was final and conclusive, and taking the view that after the additional duties had been paid the importers could go before the General Board.

On Jan. 4, 1905, Judge Coxe and a jury in the Federal Circuit Court handed down a decision in which the contention of Tiffany & Co., that the disputed question should be referred to the lower customs tribunal, was sustained. The Circuit Court of Appeals later reversed the finding of the Circuit Court, remanding the case for retrial in the lower court.

The Board of Appraisers will immediately take up the question of the classification of the pearls involved in the Tiffany suit. The issue will probably get in time to the Supreme Court.

AHEARN WON'T ANSWER.

Counsel Tells Borough President to Ignore Commissioners' Inquiry.

There is every possibility that the public hearings in connection with the Ahearn investigation, scheduled to begin to-morrow in the reception room of the Mayor's office, in the City Hall, will fall through. Mr. Ahearn, if he appears at all, undoubtedly will decline to answer the questions put to him.

Martin W. Littleton, Mr. Ahearn's counsel, it is learned, has told his client that he need not answer any questions put to him before the Commissioners of Accounts, who were to have presided at the hearing, and, further, that it is not necessary for him to obey the subpoenas issued by the Commissioners. In a letter written to his assistant, Mr. Butts, in Albany, on Thursday, Corporation Counsel Ellison, who was to have conducted the Ahearn hearings personally, admitted that there was some doubt as to the powers of the Commissioners in the premises.

Should the hearings fail, it is highly probable that the Corporation Counsel will make public without delay everything that his special assistant, John P. Mitchell, and William M. Ivins have discovered in connection with the conduct of the Borough President's office. The two men have been investigating for months, and Mr. Ellison said yesterday:

"The idea of holding public examinations was simply an act of courtesy on our part, intended to give Mr. Ahearn a chance to explain some strange happenings in his office, before the facts as disclosed by the investigations of Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Ivins were made public. It will be remembered that Mr. Ahearn asked to have the investigation made."

PEARY TELLS PLAN FOR ARCTIC VOYAGE

Will Sail About July 1 in the Completely Fitted Roosevelt.

THINKS HE WILL SUCCEED

If Not He May Say the North Pole Is Beyond the Reach of Man.

PORTLAND, Me., April 13.—Lieut. Commander Robert E. Peary announced to-day that he would sail from New York as near July 1 next as possible in another attempt to reach the north pole. Sufficient money has been contributed, he said, for repairing his ship, the Roosevelt, and a fund of $100,000, necessary to equip the expedition, would be available before July 1.

Commander Peary said that he expected to arrive among the icefields the middle of July. His equipment and crew will be practically the same as on his recently completed expedition. He will buy 200 dogs when he arrives in Greenland. He anticipated that the trip might be made in about the same length of time as the 1905 trip, which required about sixteen months.

"In relation to my plans," said Commander Peary, "I shall follow almost to the letter those of my last trip. I guess it won't be necessary for me to go into details about those, as they are too well known. I shall go as far north as possible with the Roosevelt, and after getting the dogs from my Eskimo friends I shall start over the big icefields by sleds. While en route we will establish sub-supply stations, or caches, to be used in case the provisions we carry should give out. The main source of supply will be the Roosevelt.

"I am confident that I will be successful in this search for the long-sought goal. At any rate, it will be the supreme effort of my life, and if I am not successful I may be ready to say that the pole is beyond the reach of man."

Morris K. Jesup, President of the Peary Arctic Club, yesterday issued a statement saying that the club had resolved unanimously to place the Roosevelt on the docks for a complete outfit and to tender it to Commander Peary.

"The club has taken this action upon reports furnished by Commander Peary," Mr. Jesup said, "and believes that he will be successful. They have entire confidence in this gallant and intrepid American, and share in the pride which must animate the American people to see this effort, which the club believes will be the final one, and the planting on the north pole the American flag."

The club asks the aid of those who have heretofore contributed, as well as the co-operation of all who feel an interest in this enterprise. Subscriptions may be sent to Henry Parish, New York Life and Trust Company, 52 Wall Street, the Treasurer.

New Jersey Law Giving Corporation Officers Immunity Is Repealed.

ACTION WAS A SURPRISE

The Senate Was Expected to Kill It, but It Slipped Through Just Before Adjournment.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., April 13.—What is considered the most important piece of legislation in this State for many years looking to corporation reform was pushed through the Assembly in the early hours of this morning before the final adjournment, and will become effective if Gov. Stokes signs the bill, as he is expected to do before the time limit expires. This is the repeal of Chapter 182 of the Laws of 1903, passed on April 8 of that year, which was an enactment expressly providing for the immunity of promoters from restoration suits by defrauded stockholders. The bill was passed by the Senate some time ago under the prevailing idea that it would be killed in the Assembly.

How it got by the opponents of such reform after an unfavorable report by the Judiciary Committee is one of the most interesting incidents of an interesting session. The measure had the unqualified support of Senator Everett Colby in the upper branch and the Assemblymen who have been sympathetic to his programme have been committed to it from the start. But there seemed to be small chance for its passage until it appeared that the attention of the ber of New Jersey had been turned to the question of reforming the State's corporation laws and to this end would hold a convention on June 14 and 15 in Atlantic City. With this information came the news that the failure to pass the measure would be used in a personal way against some of its opponents and the result was a rather rapid change of heart upon the part of several prominent legislators.

Like a New York Law.

The enactment of Section 182 of the laws of 1903 attracted widespread attention at the time, in the first place because it had the effect of nullifying a long line of decisions by the New Jersey courts that the director of a corporation was in effect a trustee for all the stockholders, and always accountable for any personal profits made by reason of his trust. But, aside from this, the measure was commented upon because it was enacted at a time when litigation was already in prospect against the promoters of two or three New Jersey corporations looking to the restoration of vast promotion profits. It was a matter of common talk that a large fund was available to obtain the passage of the measure, and its enactment in New Jersey was followed shortly after by the passage of a similar law in the New York Legislature, which is still on the books in that State.

The section read as follows:

Any Director, officer, promoter, or other agent of any corporation organized or existing under the laws of this State, which shall have heretofore made or received, or who shall hereafter make or receive while acting in such capacity, any bonus, profit, or reward of any kind whatsoever out of or on account of any transaction for or with any such corporation, without the disclosure of the fact of said bonus, profit, or reward to the corporation and without obtaining its approval thereof, shall be liable to the corporation for the amount or value of such bonus, profit, or reward, for and during the period of four years from and after the making or receipt of the same, and not afterward; and an action shall lie on behalf of such corporation either at law or in equity to recover such bonus, profit, or reward, or the value thereof, or for an account with respect thereto, at any time before the expiration of said period of four years, but not afterward.

This act shall take effect immediately, but shall not affect any action or proceeding pending in any court at the time it takes effect, or any right of any corporation or of any stockholder against any such Director, officer, or promoter or other agent under existing law, provided action thereon be commenced within six months after this act takes effect.

Court Had Condemned It.

The passage of the statute in 1903 was not generally known until the following Fall, when litigation was actually started in the cass of one corporation, and the complaining stockholders discovered that they were just outside of the six months' limit prescribed. It was recognized then that the law gave complete immunity to all promoters who in the period of rapid corporation promotion that began in the later nineties made profits which in many instances were not discovered until the examination of a water-logged corporation in receivership proceedings, long after its formation, revealed what a rich thing it had been for the insiders in the early stages of the case.

But more than this, the four years' limitation set for the future was seen to grant similar immunity in instances where misdoing may be concealed during the early years of corporate existence by the payment of fictitious dividends and kindred devices. How clearly this was recognized by the courts appears in the decision in the case of Loudenslager vs. the Woodbury Heights Land Company, in which the court said:

The effect of this statue seems to be to create a statutory limitation of four years on the liability for profits inequitably obtained by promoters and others in a fiduciary relation to corporations, irrespective of the fact as to whether the transaction is made during that time or not.

The principle running through all the authorities on this branch of law rests not upon the imposition of a penalty for concealment, but upon the single ground that one in a fiduciary capacity will not be permitted to retain a profit inequitably obtained.

Think Stokes Will Sign New Bill.

Th repeal of the statute in question is held by lawyers to throw open the doors for the pursuit of any Directors or promoters who at any time have made illicit profits out of their corporations, whether before the passage of the act, during the time it was in force, or in the future, inasmuch as the liability previously recognized was the result of a line of judicial decisions which were nullified only so long as the act remained in force.

It is believed here that Gov. Stokes will favor the repeal, which is deemed to be in line with the language of his last annual message:

"The rights of the owners of a single share must be held as sacred as the rights of a man who counts his shares by thousands. Let our laws on this subject be such a model of efficient justice that they will attract honest capital, but with full notice that in New Jersey neither men nor capital will be permitted to do wrong, but, on the other hand, that both will always be protected so long as they do right."

GEN. J. F. WADE RETIRES.

Ends 46 Years' Service as Second in Army Rank.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—Major Gen. James F. Wade, the senior of that rank in the army and next in rank to Lieut. Gen. MacArthur, terminated his active connection with the military establishment to-day by operation of law, on account of age. He will become 64 years old, the retiring age, on Sunday. His military services cover a period of forty-six years and include participation in the civil war, the Indian campaigns, and the Spanish-American war.

The retirement of Gen. Wade will result in the promotion of Brig. Gen. William S. McCaakey, commanding the Department of Texas, to the grade of Major General and the promotion of Col. Charles Morton of the Seventh Cavalry, which is in the Philippines, to the grade of Brigadier General.

Major Gen. Frederick D. Grant, commanding the Department of the East at New York, will succeed Gen. Wade in the command of the Atlantic Division. The division command will be abolished on July 1 next and merged in the Department of the East. Gen. Grant will retain that command until relieved by Gen. Wood, when he will probably be assigned to the command of the Department of the Lakes at Chicago.

DRIVERLESS TEAM RUNS AWAY.

Horses Smash Into Street Car After Knocking Down Several Persons.

A team of big gray horses drawing a carriage ran away from a theatre in the Broadway section and across town through Thirty-second Street, and was smashed to pieces at Third Avenue and Thirty-second Street about the time the theatres were closing last night.

The driverless runaways plunged in front of a fast-moving northbound Third Avenue car, the horses were thrown and badly cut, while the carriage, which contained some women's gloves and umbrellas, was demolished.

The police of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station reported that several persons were knocked down by the runaways, including a man named John Hazard, who refused to tell the police his address and who, when he was picked up, said he would go to his own physician for treatment.

The driver of the horses later appeared at the scene of the wreck, but the police said that he was taken away by an employe of the street car company.

The letter "D" was on the cab door and on the horses' harness. The injured horses were taken by the police to Murphy's livery stables, in Thirtieth Street, near Third Avenue.

Two dozen passengers on the street car heard the crunching of the carriage, and screaming women and excited men jumped off the car, believing somebody had been killed in the accident. When the driver appeared his face was cut and bleeding, and his clothing badly torn.

NEELY TO BE RETRIED.

Case of Alleged Cuban Postal Defaulter on Federal Court Calendar.

That Charles F. W. Neely, the alleged Cuban postal defaulter, is to be tried again by the Federal authorities was made evident yesterday by the signing of an order by Judge Lacombe on the application of Edward K. Jones, Special Assistant United States Attorney General, placing the case on the trial calendar for retrial at the April term of the United States Circuit Court.

Although he escaped criminal prosecution through the provisions of the Spanish-Cuban-American treaty, the Government hopes to recover the amount of the alleged defalcation, $132,424, by civil process.

The first trial of Neely lasted two weeks, and resulted in a disagreement. Since then Neely's counsel have endeavored to have the cash tied up by Mr. Jones released. An offer of compromise has been refused. As a result of the motion the case is restored to the calendar, and Neely will be again tried.

WHY NEW SEWER PLAN IS FAULTY

Opponents of Bronx Valley Scheme of Drainage Defend Their Position.

CALL IT CONSTITUTIONAL

And Say It Would Make the Bonded Debt $165 Per Capita—Brief Filed in Court.

J. Hampden Dougherty of 27 William Street filed yesterday with Justice Keogh, of the Supreme Court of Westchester County, a brief supporting an application made a week ago for a permanent injunction restraining the Bronx Valley Sewer Commission from accepting any bid for the construction of the work. The motion was made in behalf of Virginia G. Horton, a taxpayer of White Plains. Several weeks ago a temporary injunction was granted, which checked the work of the commission.

If the permanent injunction is granted, White Plains, Mount Vernon, Yonkers, and the other towns in Westchester County will have to seek some other solution of their knotty sewerage problem than that provided for in the present plan for a trunk sewerage system running through the Bronx Valley, deflecting through the rocky watershed between the Bronx River and the Hudson River, and emptying into the latter stream. They probably will be compelled to have recourse to septic plants for the disposal of waste. These plants, which in recent years have been greatly improved through science, have solved the sewerage problem for many inland towns of Europe, particularly in Germany.

"The action is predicated upon illegal official acts of the defendants," Mr. Dougherty says in his brief. "These acts are illegal if the statute (Chapter 646, Laws of 1905, which authorized the construction of the sewer), is in conflict with the organic law of the State. They are illegal, if, assuming the statute to be constitutional, they violate the provisions of the statutes itself, or are in conflict with well settled principles of law governing bids for public work. It is unnecessary to charge fraud. Where the acts of a public officer are illegal, the law presumes waste."

The Cost of the Work.

In addition to this summary, the brief contains an interesting statement about the cost of the work. This calls attention to an affidavit of Joseph S. Wood, who testified in the case, which shows to what extent the heavy bonded indebtedness of White Plains would be increased should this sewer be constructed.

"The assessed valuation of real estate within the limits of White Plains is $11,000,000," it says. "Its present bonded indebtedness is $1,250,000. Should the sewer be built, this debt will be increased at least $735,000, making the total bonded indebtedness of the village $1,985,000, which will be an indebtedness of $165 per capita. Mr. Wood, upon information and belief, declares that no town, village or city in the world has a per capital bonded debt of $165. Furthermore, the indebtedness will then amount to 17½ per cent. of the total valuations of the real estate.

"Such ruinouely lavish work should not be allowed to proceed, if the law, as we confidently claim, is unconstitutional. But, even assuming the law constitutional, the contract and specifications are illegal and betray a disposition to spend the money of the taxpayers of this village in a reckless and profligate manner. Against such improvidence the Court is asked to protect them."

Besides asserting that the act violates the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States and several provisions in the State Constitution, Mr. Dougherty declares that "the act offends against that provision of the constitution which forbids the expenditure of any county moneys for other than county purposes," and that "the statute unconstitutionally delegates the power of taxation to a commission having no governmental functions to determine in its judgment or discretion the amount to be raised by taxation."

In connection with the first of these alleged violations, Mr. Dougherty contends:

"It may be conceded that the intent of the act is that the certificate of indebtedness shall be redeemed from proceeds of sales of bonds, and that the principal and interest of the bonds shall be paid from the taxes to be levied and collected within the assessment area created by the statute; but there is a primary liability of the county and that liability remains upon the county, unless and until a sufficient amount is collected from the assessment area to discharge the county's obligations.

"Should the assessment, for any reason whatever, fall of full collection, the liability of the county would be absolute. The county is distinctly made liable for the cost of land to be condemned, irrespective of the bond issue. Yet no portion of the work authorized may fairly be said to be a county business or for a county purpose. In fact, the impropriety of imposing any burden upon the county at large is manifest throughout the act itself."

A New Jersey Precedent.

In support of the second alleged violation, Mr. Dougherty says:

"It was upon precisely this point that a recent statute of New Jersey, passed April 22, 1903, creating the Passaic Valley Sewer Commission, was declared to be unconstitutional by the highest court of New Jersey. The statute (Chapter 646, Laws of 1905,) is almost a literal transcript of the New Jersey statute condemned by the Court of Errors and Appeals of that State. There the sewer commissioners were authorized to expend a sum not to exceed $9,000,000, and there was no limit to the expense of maintenance. Here the Bronx Valley Sewer Commission is authorized to spend a sum not exceeding $2,000,000, and there is no limit to the outlay for sewer maintenance.

"The differences between the New Jersey statuts and th act creating the Bronx Commission are insignificant. The New Jersey act gave the sewer commissioners power to issue bonds. The New York statute declares that the County of Westchester shall issue the bonds, 'but they shall be executed when authorized by the commissioners.' Again, the New Jersey commissioners were authorized to issue temporary certificatee of indebtednees, whereas the New York statute directs the County Treasurer to issue them 'upon demand of the said commissioners hereunder.' The sovereign, absolute authority over the indebtedness is thus vested in the commissioners. Their flat must be obeyed. Such legislation is without parallel in the annals of thie State. It is unconstitutional."

It is quite likely that the Merchants' Association will get after the commission. The propoeed sewerage system is to empty into the Hudson and the association has a committee which is striving to prevent further pollution of that river.

MR. FERULLI'S MARRIAGE.

No Surprise, He Says, Either to Miss Meyer's Relatives or His.

Giuseppe Umberto Ferulli, the former wine checker at the Waldorf-Astoria, the story of whose marriage on March 19 to the wealthy Miss Irma Meyer of the Hotel Marie Antoinette was printed in Saturday's TIMES, told something about himself yesterday to show that his acquaintance with the former Miss Meyer was not of such recent date as some of their acquaintances had supposed. Mr. Ferulli, whose fellow-workers used to call him "Count," though he himself never laid claim to any title, is now in the export business here.

"Miss Meyer and I," he said yesterday, "met in Rome about five years ago, at a reception held in the home of Senator Nicola Vischi. At that time Miss Meyer was visiting in Europe with her mother and cousin. My home was in Bari, Italy. My father was a Captain in the Eighth Artillery, and at his request I served in the army in the capacity of Lieutenant.

"After my term of service was up, several years ago, I came to this country. As I knew practically no English when I came here, I obtained a temporary position in the Waldorf-Astoria, mainly in order to learn the English language. I obtained that position mainly through the courtesy of Baron Fava, who was then the Italian Ambassador at Washington. I left my position at the Waldorf several years ago, and since then I have been engaged in the import and export business on my own behalf.

"I never engaged in teaching languages here, although I have always been interested in literature; in fact, I am the Vice President of Dante Alighieri, a literary society here. I have, of course, always gone under my proper name, and have never called myself 'Count.'

"There has really not been any attempt at secrecy regarding our marriage. It has been known all along by both our families. There is no dissatisfaction among the members of my wife's family, and congratulations have been received by us from the members of both our families."

Twenty Prisoners Entombed.

CRANKY SICK MAN SHOOTS 3 RELATIVES

Ticket Agent Mortally Wounds Nephew and Another Nephew's Wife.

LATTER'S HUSBAND HURT

Inflamed by Drink, Matthewson Suddenly Began Firing Without Warning.

Three persons, two of whom will probably die of their injuries, were shot early yesterday morning by Frederick Matthewson, a ticket agent employed at the 127th Street Station of the Second Avenue Elevated Railroad. The shooting occurred at the home of Mattheson's nephew, George Hoffman, 698 East 135th Street. Matthewson had boarded there since his wife was removed to a cancer hospital eight months ago. Hoffman, who is a trainmaster employed by the Interborough Railway Company, lived there with his wife, Annabelle, and another nephew of Mattheson, Arthur Gublemann, 24 years old. It was Mrs. Hoffman and this young man who were seriously wounded by the bullets from Mattheson's pistol. Mattheson's nephew, Hoffman, was shot in the back but his injuries proved to be slight.

According to the story told by Hrs. Hoffman in the Lincoln Hospital Mattheson was a man of ungovernable temper. This was said to Coroner Robert McDonald, who informed the woman that she was going to die and that be wanted her ante-mortem statement. In it she said that Mattheson's ungovernable temper had not been improved by an attack of pneumonia, from which he suffered recently. In fact, she said the man seemed to become an unbearable crank after his illness. He had been confined to his bed for many months. She pitied him because his wife was in a hospital suffering from a cancer, and during his long illness Mrs. Hoffman said she nursed him back to health. Then he began drinking heavily and came home intoxicated on several occastons.

Sick, but Left Windows Open.

Last Monday he returned to work on the elevated railroad as ticket agent, and worked steadily until Friday night. About 7 o'clock Friday night, when he got back to the Hoffman home be went right up stairs, saying he was ill again. At 7 o'clock yesterday morning Mrs. Hoffman went to call him and found the windows of his room wide open. She reproved him for having the windows open, saying that he acted like a child, although he was a man 58 years old.

"If you get sick again by opening windows like this," she said, "it'll be your own fault and I wont take care of you. I'll ship you off to a hospital just as soon as it happens."

Mattheson returned a surly answer, and from the way he talked Mrs. Hoffman concluded that he had been drinking during the ni .. However, she went down stairs to the kitchen and began preparing breakfast. Fifteen minutes later Mattheson appeared in the kitchen, and walking toward Mrs. Hoffman drew a pistol from his pocket and without saying a word fired a shot into her abdomen. The woman screamed for help and fell to the floor.

Bullets for Two Others.

Her husband, George Hoffman, the nephew of the shooter, ran into the house. He had been sitting on the back stoop. Seeing what had happened, he attempted to take the revolver away from Matthewson, but in the struggle the uncle fired another shot, the bullet striking Hoffman in the back. Hoffman fell to the floor, and Mattheson then started to run up stairs, still holding the revolver. His other nephew, young Gublemann, had heard the shots, and had started down stairs without waiting to dress. Mattbeson, who encountered him on the stairway, leveled his weapon and fired. Gublemann tumbled to the bottom of the stairs with a bullet in his abdomen.

After shooting young Gublemann Mattheson ran into the street. Hoffman, by this time had recovered sufficiently to get on his feet and follow his uncle. As he ran through 135th Street he yelled for help. Policeman Ulrich, at the corner of Willis Avenue and 135th Street, saw Mattbeson approaching, revolver still in hand, and with Hoffman chasing him. The policeman hurried forward and grabbed the shooter. After a struggle he succeeded in disarming Mattheson. Hoffman quickly explained what had happened. The policeman summoned an ambulance, and todk Mattheson back to the Hoffman home, where Mrs. Hoffman identified the prisoner as the man who had shot her.

Empty Whisky Flask Found.

Mrs. Mattheson and young Gublemann were taken to the Lincoln Hospital. Hoffman said his injuries were slight, and refused to go to the hospital, and followed the policeman and Mattheson to the police station. There Mattheson refused to talk about the case. Later in the day he was arraigned in the Morrisania Court, where Magistrate House remanded him to await the result of the injuries he had inflicted. Hoffman told the police that while Mattheson appeared to be suffering from alcoholism, he could not understand just where the man had obtained liquor during the night, as he had not been away from the house. The police searched the man's room and found an empty whisky flask. Hoffman had his injuries attended to by his family physician.

At the hospital last night it was said that Mrs. Hoffman would probably die before morning.

AUCTIONEERS LOSE IN TEST.

Federal Jury Checks Purchases by Them from Firms About to Fail.

A test case has just been decided in the United States District Court to put a stop to the practice of auctioneers purchasing stocks of merchandise in bulk from dealers whom they know are about to fail. The decision was given in the case of H. Baltuch, a shoe dealer at 215 Clinton Street, who sold out on Oct. 6, and was put into bankruptcy three days later. Stern, Singer & Barr, attorneys for Henry Pollock, trustee in bankruptcy, brought suit before Judge Hough and a jury against Samuel Bogin and Jacob Kirschberg, auctioneers, who purchased the stock in bulk, to have the sale declared void and set aside. After a two days' trial, the jury gave a verdict in favor of the trustee.

The action was to compel the auctioneers to pay to the trustee the full market value of the stock, estimated at $2,400. The auctioneers paid Baltuck $1,200 for it.

Mr. J. Barr, the attorney, said yesterday that this decision will undoubtedly have the effect of greatly diminishing, if not wholly preventing, sales of this character in the future. Powell & Campbell, shoe merchants, undertook the entire expense of bringing about this result. The shoe merchants believe that with yesterday's decision by the United States District Court, auctioneers will not be so ready to buy stock on bulk if they have to pay twice for the goods.

New Italian Liner on Her Way Here.

The opening of this service establishes a new fast Italy mail line direct to Mediterranean ports.

WANTS ORDINANCE REPEALED.

City Railway's Manager Says Inner Car Gate Should Be Closed.

Several accidents, one of which may prove fatal, have resulted from the ordinance which went into effect on March 12 requiring that both gates on the rear platform of Broadway surface cars be kept open between Fifty-ninth and Manhattan Streets, according to letter mailed yesterday by General Manager Oren Root, Jr., of the New York City Railway Company to Chairman John Dremid of the Railroad Committee of the Board of Aldermen.

The ordinance was passed on Feb. 26 in response to the petition of residents on the upper west side, who asserted that passengers leaving a car by the outer gate were in danger of being run down by passing vehicles.

In his letter Mr. Root said that passengers were accustomed to closed inner gates, and that having them open for only a short distance had caused the accidents and would cause many more. The probably fatal injuries sustained by Frank Ensor, who fell from a car near 125th Street and fractured his skull on Friday night, said Mr. Root, were due entirely to the open inner gate. He asked that the ordinance be repealed.

JAPANESE LABORERS HELD ON STEAMER

Bound for Canada, but There Is Nothing to Prevent Them Coming Back Here.

CARRIERS NOT RESPONSIBLE

Men Say They Intend to Re-Enter This Country If Possible—Official Inquiry in Progress.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 13.—Two hundred and ninety-five Japanese laborers who came in yesterday on the Pacific Mail steamship Korea are detained on the ship pending advices from the Department of Immigration in Washington as to whether the local authorities shall allow them to proceed by steamer to British Columbia. Their passports are for Honolulu, and Immigration Commissioner North is doubtful as to passing them on to their port of destination.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—Under the regulations governing the entrance into this country of Japanese laborers, there is no way of preventing the Japanese from Honolulu trans-shipping at San Francisco for British Columbia. It is evident from inquiries made by Government officials that the Japanese to whom the Japanese Government issues passports to Mexico or to the Hawaiian Islands have no intention of remaining there. Their destination, as the laborers themselves have admitted on examination, is the United States

The regulations governing the exclusion of Chinese laborers do not apply to the Japanese. When Chinese laborers ship in transit through the United States to another country, a photograph is taken of each individual, and the railroad or steamship company carrying him is required to give the Government a bond to prevent his escape. It is different with the Japanese. No photographs are taken and no bonds are exacted. If a Japanese laborer escapes from the train or steamship while in transit, the Government has no recourse. That many of them do take advantage of the opportunity to get into this country is known officially, but there is no way, under the regulations, to prevent them from embracing the opportunity.

Commissioner Sargent of the Bureau of Immigration declines to discuss the subject, but it is known that Secretary Straus of the Department of Commerce and Labor is keeping in close touch with the situation. He, too, is reticent about the matter. Trouble is being experienced in handling the question, however, particularly that part of it which relates to the Japanese immigrants who are arriving in Mexico. It is practically impossible to prevent them from being smuggled across the border into the United States, and the Government has no means of identifying them after they reach this country.

The question is likely to become more serious in the near future.

WESTERN EDITORS FOR ROOSEVELT

They Find Popular Sentiment Obliterates Party Lines.

SOME UNWILLING WITNESSES

"The Masses Trust Him and Love Him for the Enemies He Has Made."

From the further West replies to the inquiry of THE TIMES as to Mr. Roosevelt's continued favor with his countrymen, addressed to the Republican editors, are still coming in. Almost unanimously these editors, speaking each for his community, report a rising rather than a receding tide of popularity for the President, and, what is more, public confidence in him and his policies. This is true even where the editors themselves confess or hint disapproval and argue no good for the Republican Party as such. Several note the obliteration of party lines in the general enthusiasm and admiration for the man in the White House, and some dwell particularly upon the hold he has gained over the Democrats. Some think a recession from the third term resolve would lose much of this favor; others, taking that resolve as final, regret that it is impossible to have Mr. Roosevelt for another four years.

Here are the replies themselves:

Chico, Cal., April 6.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
In answer to your inquiry regarding the status of President Roosevelt's popularity in this section, I can say that it is my honest belief that he is as popular with the voters here as he was in 1904. Of course, the Japanese question put a temporary kink in the following of Roosevelt, but now that the smoke has cleared away we are beginning to realize that Roosevelt's apparent impulsiveness in the matter was savored with a degree of longheadedness which now makes it apparent to us all that "everything has come out all right in the wash."

Most of us in this "neck of the woods" want Roosevelt for a third term.

Appreciating the opportunity that I have had to place a word for Theodore Roosevelt, I am JOHN BRISCOE,
Secretary and Treasurer Chico Enterprise.

Fresno, Cal., April 7.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
In answer to your inquiry, my impression is that President Roosevelt is not as popular, but is "as strong generally with the voters" as he was at the time of his election. He is not as well liked, but he is as much trusted. I think the voters of California stand ready to vote for President Roosevelt or any candidate he favors by an undiminished majority. Roosevelt has said and done things California does not like, and his manners have grated harshly. But the people of California have identified him with a movement for which, under him or anybody else who sincerely and ably represents it, they will stand.
CHESTER H. ROWELL,
Editor Fresno Republican.

Hanford, Cal., April 6.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
With us Roosevelt, as present President, is stronger than he ever has been. Our people, regardless of politics, recognize him as the greatest man of his time. They would not, I believe, admire him as they do now should he rescind his declaration that he would refuse another nomination. Personally, I regard the movement to force a nomination upon him as dangerous to the Republican Party.
FRED A. DODGE,
Editor Sentinel.

Placerville, Cal., April 6.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
Regarding the popularity of Theodore Roosevelt in this section will say that his popularity has increased instead of diminishing. During a trip made for the newspaper of one year past through Nevada I find his policy has been accepted almost as perfection among the silver Democrats in that section. S. J. SIMS,
Editor Placerville Nugget.

Woodland, Cal., April 6.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
Answering your inquiry regarding whether President Roosevelt is as popular and strong with the voters in this section as at the time of his election, I give it as my opinion that he is. The wave of feeling that swept over the coast at the time he sent his message to Congress bearing on the Japanese question has almost entirely passed, and his stand on other questions of importance has shown that he is a man of the people. My opinion is that he is fully as strong as ever in his life. W. F. MIXON,
Editor Mail.

Durango, Col., April 8.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
Every day it looks more like Roosevelt, Southwestern Colorado, until two years ago, was a hotbed of Democrats and Populists, but Roosevelt carried this county, and he is probably the only man who can do so again. The people are clamoring for his renomination, and indications are that Colorado will instruct for Roosevelt without any qualifications.
GEORGE N. RAYMOND,
Editor Durango Evening Herald.

Pueblo, Col., April 5.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
We are in receipt of your letter of inquiry regarding President Roosevelt. In reply would say that we recently sent out postal cards to representative Republicans in every county of the State. The result of this canvass, in our judgment, makes it certain that the Republican voters of Colorado regard President Roosevelt as the strongest candidate for nomination next year, and that they are overwhelmingly in favor of his re-election, without regard to the third-term idea. The greatest objection to him as a candidate in this State comes from the cattle owners, who are opposed to the policy of a grazing tax on forest reserves.
ISAAC N. STEVENS,
Editor The Pueblo Chieftain.

Trinidad, Col., April 5.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
Roosevelt would poll more votes in this section to-day that he did at the last election.
THE CHRONICLE-NEWS.

Boise, Idaho, April 6.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
I have your request for an expression of opinion of the strength of President Roosevelt at this time as compared with that which he enjoyed at the time of his election. It is my impression he is much stronger. At the time of his election he got the support of his admirers, and many others who hoped he was strong enough to grapple with the great problems of the times in an effective manner. All the latter class are satisfied now that he is all they had hoped for, and they draw others to his support.
WILLIAM BALDERSTON,
Editor Statesman.

Shelbyville, Ill., April 10.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
Answering within inquiry, President Roosevelt is as strong and popular with the people as he has ever been. The masses understand him, have implicit confidence in him, and "love him for the enemies he has made."
THE SHELBYVILLE UNION.

Lafayette, Ind., April 8.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
In response to your inquiry concerning the present popularity of President Roosevelt with the voters as compared with his standing with them at the time of his election, I beg to state that, in my opinion, he has lost none of his prestige with the masses. At the time I received your communication, it was a question over which I had thought considerably myself, and was not able to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion. Since then, however, the Harriman-White House imbroglio has arisen, and it has brought out expression of the feeling of the people toward the President. Laying aside my personal opinion and expressing to you what I have heard expressed on all sides since the Harriman letter was made public, there is no doubt that Mr. Roosevelt is stronger now than at any time since he came into the public life of the Nation with the voters of this section of the country. W. B. FOLEY,
Editor The Courier.

Shelbyville, Ind., April 8.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
Without a doubt Roosevelt is just as popular and strong with the voters of Shelbyville County, Ind., as he was at the time of his election. This county, being recognized as the heart of Democracy of Indiana, would no doubt give Roosevelt several hundred Democratic votes in preference to William Jennings Bryan.
F. B. BULL,
Manager Shelbyville Republican.

Boone, Iowa, April 10.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
I beg your pardon for not responding sooner to the little note asking for a few words as to my opinion concerning the popularity of President Roosevelt in this section of the country.

I will say that there seems to be not the slightest diminution in his popular strength in Iowa. In fact, he has grown stronger with the people. It is common to hear a Democrat say that he will vote for "Teddy" in case he is nominated, but for Bryan in the other event. Events which have recently happened have tended to strengthen the President also. It seems to me at the present writing that if Mr. Roosevelt were to be voted on tomorrow he would have an overwhelming majority in this section.
S. G. GOLDTHWAITE,
Publisher The Boone News-Republican.

Hutchinson, Kan., April 6.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
President Roosevelt is as popular in Kansas now as he was in 1904, when he got all the votes except a few who may have marked the ballots incorrectly. Taft will do about as well.
W. Y. MORGAN,
Editor Hutchinson News.

Coldwater, Mich., April 10.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
I am in receipt of your letter of inquiry concerning the popularity of President Roosevelt in this section of the country, and I am pleased to say that at no time in his career has he been in greater favor than at present. Party lines here are practically obliterated as far as he is concerned, and he can carry Michigan by overwhelming figures against any man now before the public, Republicans and Democrats alike standing back of him and his fight for the best interests of the people. The recent development of the combination on between Harriman and the Wall Street leechee to accomplish the retirement of President Roosevelt has rekindled the flame of enthusiasm for the President in this region, and Harriman and his crowd will awake to the fact some day that the people of this country are a mighty force that must be reckoned with, and the former policy of "The public be damned" will no longer be tolerated. Any attempt to turn Michigan from supporting President Roosevelt will be resented so strongly that any man or combination of men standing in the way will be swept into oblivion. Neither Wall Street nor the railroads can run Michigan, and the hope of all Michiganders is that President Roosevelt will consent to become again a candidate for the Presidency.
C. H. NEWELL,
Publisher The Courier.

Fergus Falls, Minn., April 7.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
President Roosevelt is stronger in Minnesota than ever. The people want him to lead in this fight until it is won. The Pioneer Press, the strongest morning paper in the State, has recently turned against him, but it is so closely allied to the Hill interests that it will help rather than hurt him. I am a member of the State Legislature, and a poll of the members just completed shows that nearly 80 per cent. favor his re-election.
ELMER E. ADAMS,
Editor The Fergus Falls Journal.

Great Falls, Mon., April 7.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
President Roosevelt was a 3 to 1 favorite in this section during election time, or near that figure, but he has grown far and away more popular and stronger with the people since that time. There be politicians of opposite faith, and some of the Republican faith, with whom Mr. Roosevelt has not grown, but with the great mass of the people, regardless of politics, the trend of opinion runs that Teddy is fighting the battle of the people against the trusts, and that the trusts are doing everything to discredit him with the people. All of which serves to bring them nearer to the real hearts of the people, and cause them to rally around him as their own personal St. George in the fight with the trust-power dragon. Under such circumstances the popularity and strength of Mr. Roosevelt cannot but continue to grow.
E. H. COONEY,
Editor Leader.

Hannibal, Mo., April 7.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
Out here in Missouri, where the big surprise of 1904 was sprung upon the politicians of the country, Theodore Roosevelt is still as popular as he ever was. Times are good, the people are employed at good wages, cities are becoming metropoli, and towns are becoming cities. The flurries that beset Wall Street do not affect the price of Missouri mules; the attacks of Burton on the west and of Harriman on the east, both directed at Roosevelt, don't worry Missouri, for Missouri is too busy being prosperous. Her vote for Roosevelt was a big advertisement for the State. People have learned that Missouri is alive to the present, and capital from without the State is being invested within it. Roosevelt brought the awakening, and with Missouri Roosevelt is all right.

Fargo, N. D., April 6.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
The sentiment of North Dakota is overwhelmingly in favor of President Roosevelt, and the common people, as well as the politicians, would like to force him to again be a candidate, believing that he would be overwhelmingly returned to the executive chair. The President's style takes with our frontier people, as they are always prompt to decide, and, at the same time, they cannot justly be said to be devoid of culture. The President was for some time a citizen of this State, and has endeared himself to all classes, and his course as Chief Executive meets with the decided approval of the voters of North Dakota. H. C. PLUMLEY,
Editor The Fargo Forum.

Replying to your favor of the 1st inst., in which you ask us to expree an opinion as to whether President Rooeevelt is as popular and strong as ever in this section as he was at the time of his election, you will permit me to say that he is very much stronger. If he should be nominated next year Ohio would give him such a vote as no candidate has ever received in this State and this county, which a few years ago gave him a plurality of 8,000, we are confident would come pretty near doubling it.
C. L. KNIGHT,
Manager The Beacon Journal Company.

Niles, Ohio, April 11.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
President Roosevelt appears to be quite as strong and popular generally with the voters of this section as he wae at the time of his election, and from appearances we would judge that he will remain so ae long as the Republican papere of the county keep his individual name eo prominently before the public at the expense of otber good Republicans, also at the ultimate expense of the Republican Party. W. C. BROWN,
Manager Niles Daily News.

To the Editor of The New York Times:
There is no doubt that Pennsylvania Republicans are the sturdy advocates of President Roosevelt and that the overwhelming majority of them would be glad to see him renominated. There is no crystallization of sentiment for any other candidate, although there is general confidence in Senator Knox.

Salt Lake City, Utah, April 8.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
Replying to yours of April 1, I would state that President Roosevelt's popularity in this region does not depend upon what the people think about him or his policies, but it rests solely upon the approval of him by the hierarchic priesthood of the Mormon Church, with whom he has made a bargain to sustain them in their polygamy and defiance of law in consideration of getting the votes of the Mormon people under their orders. Among Republicans, who are in fact Republicans, Roosevelt's popularity is a rapidly vanishing quantity here.

Baraboo, Wis., April 10.
To the Editor of The New York Times:
Speaking for this section of Wisconsin, from what I am able to observe, I believe President Roosevelt is more popular with the voters to-day than at the time of his election. The people know him better, and his attitude toward the corporations is so thoroughly in harmony with the teachings of Senator La Follette, whose friends are many, that his position is stronger than was possible three yeare ago. Criticism of his acts or intentions is rarely heard, but expressions of content with his leaderehip is voiced every day. H. E. COLE,

To the Editor of The New York Times:
Replying to your question as to whether President Roosevelt is as popular and strong generally with the voters in Wyoming as he was at the time of his election, I am convinced that President Roosevelt and his vigorous policies for a moral and material uplift are more strongly intrenched with the people of Wyoming than ever before. The people of Wyoming desire Roosevelt for President in 1908 or some one who will carry out his policies and views. W. C. DEMING,

DINNER TO DR. W. H. NICHOLS.

Friends Honor the Chemist on Eve of His Sailing for Europe.

At the Chemists' Club last night friends gave a dinner to Dr. William H. Nichols to mark pleasantly his forthcoming departure for Europe. Dr. Nichols until recently was the President of the General Chemical Club, and is now Chairman of its Board of Directors. His services in industrial chemistry have won him such recognition as the Presidency of the Society of Chemical Industry, where he succeeded Sir William Ramsay; the honorary degree of Doctor of Science, conferred by Oxford, a distinction which is enjoyed by but three men in the world, and the honorary degree of Doctor of Philosophy from Columbia.

There were no formal speeches, though a number of Dr. Nichols's friends expressed their regret at his departure, and wished him luck. Charles F. Chandler, Professor of Chemistry in Columbia, was the toastmaster. Nahan Franko's orchestra played during the dinner. Those present included Controller Herman A. Metz, W. E. Frew, Vice President of the Corn Exchange Bank; James Speyer, C. B. Zabriskie, James H. Oliphant, and William A. Nash, President of the Corn Exchange Bank.

LOOKING AHEAD.

Last January the City's debt capacity was put at $31,000,000, and it is expected that the increase of real estate valuation will add, say, $50,000,000. To-day comes Chief Engineer Lewis with an estimate of work chargeable against these assets of $200,000,000. It is a condition, not a theory, which confronts the City's financiers, and it is a question what they will do with their problem, which is not exclusively theirs. Those who pay the bills also might as well run through Mr. Lewis's list and make up their minds which is indispensable, and if the conclusion is that none can be dispensed with then arises the larger question of ways and means.

It is doubtful if anybody could be found willing to strike a cent off the $20,000,000 allotted for school buildings and sites, and there are $80,000,000 more or less allotted for rapid transit additions and improvements, independent of the $15,000,000 line to Coney Island. Waterfront improvements account for $12,000,000, parks and similar demands for $20,000,000 or so, and $10,000,000 is allowed for contingencies. It would almost seem that the only possible economy is in the moderate balance distributed among items calling for scattered single millions or hundreds of thousands. Any two or three economies of this sort hardly seem worth while, and the inconvenience resulting from a wholesale lopping off of these relatively inconsiderable trifles might almost rival the all but impossible alternative doing without schools or subways or docks or parks.

This situation is embarrassing enough, and yet the list may be searched in vain for additions almost equally indispensable. There is a trifle of $161,000,000 for the water supply. It is true that this is not chargeable to the debt, but if anybody thinks that its burdens will be evaded for this reason his mistake will become evident to him in due course. Manhattan has need of a $20,000,000 sewer system, and a $20,000,000 Court House has been talked of. Firehouses are almost as necessary as schoolhouses, and $25,000,000 is wanted on that account. It is as necessary that the City water should be pure as that it should be abundant, and a filtration plant would be likelier to cost over than under $10,000,000. These are some of the ambitious plans not included in the $200,000,000, but which will grow larger rather than less by postponement. And there are expenses which defy either postponement or control. Despite every good resolution the floating debt has run up to $50,000,000, and the salary list thrives like Jonah's gourd. The capital sum represented by the growth in the City's miscellaneous expenditures is amazing.

There are alleviations, of course. The sums mentioned as wanted for water and subways are rather investments than sunken capital. The same is true to some extent regarding the docks, although lately there have been signs that the traffic is being charged rather more than it will bear, with the result of starving commerce as an incident to making the docks self-supporting or even profit producing. Moreover these demands of whatever nature mature at an awkward time in the money market, when it is doubtful if any considerable sum can be borrowed without raising the interest charge now allowable by law. Now capital borrowed even at 4 per cent. doubles the burden upon the City in twenty-five years, and additions above 4 per cent. would transfer such enterprises as were on the doubtful list to the category of impossibles forthwith.

There is special timeliness in this résumé. It is most apropos to the proposals to raise the rate of interest upon City bonds, and to exclude from the debt aggregate such items as are self-supporting now, and practically certain sources of profit hereafter. It is timely in connection with the letting of the subway contracts, and powerfully supports any possible offers to use private funds in such works. Legislation making mandatory increases of salaries by millions is hardly arguable with this list in hand. The City forthwith should cease assuming the entire cost of street improvements which enrich abutting owners. And before there is even the slightest addition to the City's permanent debt there should be diligent effort to enlarge current income by making burdens bear equally upon all. There are gross undervaluations and evasions of taxation in other ways which are an imposition upon honest citizens apart from the City's necessities for all its available resources just at present.

CAPITALIZATION AND RATEMAKING.

The genial pirate of the railway world—Chicago Great Western—this week began hauling grain free from Council Bluffs to Omaha, which would seem to indicate that railway competition is not as dead as some think, whether or not the community-of-interest idea is still surviving. The incident is worth noting because of the light it throws upon the La Follette-Roosevelt idea that capitalization and rates are in some immediate relation. When Chicago Great Western hauls grain free it is evidently enlarging cost of operation rather than adding to its dividend fund, regardless of the needy condition of owners of its various classes of preference and debentures, to say nothing of common stock.

The fact is that railways charge for their traffic rates that they deem best for their business, for the excellent reason that if they charge more they lose the traffic. In this case the explanation of the free haul is that Chicago Great Western is under compulsion to maintain the Omaha market upon a parity with the Chicago market for grain. When the Inter-State Commerce decision authorized Union Pacific to include elevator service in its rates Chicago Great Western had no alternative but to do the same or lose the business. Accordingly, it hauls grain free in order to get it into its elevators at Omaha. There is not the slightest suggestion that either road considered the capitalization of itself, or of its competitor, in fixing these rates. Their capitalizations would also be irrelevant in case a competitor of both was thinking of entering the field. The question then would be whether the newcomer would be able, upon the whole, considering capitalization in connection with all other factors, to do the business for less than the others. If so, the greater the fictitious capitalization the greater the burden of carrying on the competition, and the honestly financed road would be the survivor.

But suppose—as is actually the case—that the newcomer would have hard work to establish itself against those already in possession of the field—is it not clear that no average or ordinary rate of remuneration would tempt its promoters into the field? And would not their exclusion from the field by the limitation of their profits fortify the monopoly of roads now operating? And which is more in the interest of shippers of freight and consumers of commodities—that capital should be forbidden alluring profits, or that the profits should be permitted and railway construction and competition be promoted?

MR. MORGAN'S CAREER.

No one can read the sketch of the career of J. PIERPONT MORGAN published elsewhere in the Sunday TIMES this morning without obtaining a very clear idea of the "elements of success" in Mr. MORGAN'S make-up that have not only given him the uncontested primacy in American finance, where he has long stood as the most massive and conspicuous figure, but have won him his world-wide reputation for honorable dealing, which is his highest title to confidence. It is evident that Mr. MORGAN'S distinction is the fruit not solely of his native ability, nor of his soundness of judgment, of his energy, of his industry, or of his dominating will. It rests upon all these together, and in him each of these qualities is remarkable, but co-ordinating and controlling them all is the master quality of constructive genius.

The story of his life brings that quality pre-eminently to the fore. The comparison of his career with that of noted American railroad wreckers and looters is trite enough, but it has the deathless virtue of always enforcing the point that reputation worth having is won by building, by making, by creating, never by destroying and diminishing. Increase is nature's law, and it has been Mr. MORGAN'S law. It is not merely increase for himself—that the wreckers have often notably won. He illustrates Mr. MALLOCK'S contention that though the founding, the extension, or the reorganizing and saving of great industrial systems may bring millions of reward to the men who conceive and execute the work, they bestow an immensely greater aggregate of wealth and immeasureably greater benefits upon their fellow-men, upon the communities and the countries in which their work is done.

Mr. MORGAN, as our sketch of his life makes sufficiently clear, has always been an optimist. He believes in the United States of America, in the country and its people, in its resources and in their development, and it is to development and increase that he has consistently applied his great powers, and has applied them with such regard for the standards of business honor and uprightness that he and his house have stood above injurious imputation or attack.

THE JURY'S POINT OF VIEW.

The impressive statement by Mr. H. C. BREARLEY, Juror No. 6 in the Thaw trial, which THE TIMES published yesterday, commands the attention of laymen and jurists alike. To both its interest consists in its extraordinary reflection of the jury's mind after the whole presentation of the case. Batteries of legal talent had for months been trained upon this jury, with the result of producing in its consciousness a detailed picture of the murder of STANFORD WHITE, laying bare all possible antecedent motives and springs of passion. The complete reflex of this vast preparation is found in Mr. BREARLEY'S narrative, an altogether wonderful intellectual feat performed by a man physically exhausted, requiring to be roused from fits of sleep that seized him during the dictation. On several counts the story should prove useful to those who shall watch or participate in the conduct of the second trial.

In the first place, it appears that the prosecution overlooked the crucial point on which a verdict for murder in the first degree might have been had. Mr. JEROME in his summing up touched this point, says Mr. BREARLEY; he had "referred to the fact that when THAW stepped out into the hall beside the elevators [on the night of the murder] he had time in which to slip his revolver from the holster in his pocket and place it in the more convenient pocket of the light overcoat he wore. It had been warmly debated during the evening before whether the testimony actually bore out this contention." After catching sight of WHITE in the Garden THAW had "gone out for two or three minutes," and then proceeded to the gallery overlooking the auditorium "and remained two or three minutes." If in this interval he had shifted his revolver from the holster, premeditated murder would have been proved.

The jury called for the mass of evidence. It was too voluminous to permit a thorough search among the direct and cross examinations, and the vital piece of evidence which the five disagreeing jurymen disputed was not found. But the defense had itself accepted the testimony of JAMES CLINCH SMITH. "A very large part of the argument of those who advocated conviction was based upon what he testified to," said Mr. BREARLEY. This related to THAW'S perfectly sane conversation with SMITH a few minutes before the shooting, which covered gossip about Wall Street stocks, the performance of "Mam'zelle Champagne," ocean travel, mutual acquaintances, companionship with young women, and other casual topics, showing complete absence in THAW of symptoms of "brain storm." It was then he espied WHITE, excused himself for a few moments, passed and repassed SMITH, each time nodding and smiling pleasantly, and quietly proceeded to the spot where he shot his victim. The jurors who clung to the "brain storm" theory would have needed little to convince them that the murder was perpetrated deliberately, with malice aforethought, and not by the uncontrollable impulse of insanity, had the prosecution but made clear to them the time of the shifting of the pistol from its holster.

If the prosecution suffered from this defect in the presentation to the jury, the jury itself erred in rejecting the Evelyn Nesbit affidavit because of the character of HUMMEL. The document was its own sufficient proof, signed by EVELYN NESBIT and duly attested by a notary, and its credibility was by no means affected by the character of the man in whose office it was witnessed. The jury rightly discredited Lawyer DELMAS'S appeal to the unwritten law. That appeal, although it was the supreme effort of his legal career, would have failed with any twelve intelligent men. The girl's story, too, was "rather surprisingly" forced into the background, and attention was "almost immediately fixed upon the events of the fateful June evening from which all the subsequent events have grown." Here the jury's attention remained fixed. The lesson of Mr. BREARLEY'S recital at this point will not be missed by the prosecution when a second jury is impaneled.

FLINGING FISTS.

Our bellicose neighbor, The Japanese-American Commercial Weekly, thus delivers itself on the topic now uppermost during the advent of the "peace pilgrims":

It is war or rumors of war that wake nations to the reality of the world, to the realization of their positions. To illustrate, when a man is sleepy, let him fling a fist at himself, landing that fist somewhere in his body where he is most sensitive, and he will instantly recover from his sleepiness. While it is necessary to sleep when sleep is necessary, it is while we are awake that we do things.

To this illustration might be opposed the fact that most men succeed in maintaining a fairly energetic wakefulness without finding it necessary to "fling a fist," whether into their own midst or into that of their fellows. Among nations Japan is just now a notable instance of this principle.

"NUNC PRO TUNC."

We have had already occasion once or twice to observe that, as a detective of equine nidification, the German press has no equal or second. The most modern instance of this truth is furnished by "a Berlin weekly" in a masterpiece of detection, which is the subject of an amusing special cablegram to THE SUNDAY TIMES.

According to this tale, "COL. HEROS VON BORKE," who was "one of the few Germans who served in the Confederate Army," and "who died recently," left as a rich legacy unto his issue a tale, as follows: Had the South made good its claim to independence, Prince FRIEDRICH KARL of Hohenzollern would have been invited to be the King of the Southern monarchy. LEE and STUART favored the Prince, and the Prince himself knew of the plan."

This is too delightful. Prince FRIEDRICH KARL of Hohenzollern one supposes to be the scion of the family who, six years after the American Civil War, became famous as the "Red Prince." Not only was he of no international account during the American Civil War, but his country was of not very much account. It was not until a year after the conclusion of the American Civil War that Prussia succeeded in wresting the primacy of Germany from Austria. Up to that time the primacy had been Austrian. LOUIS NAPOLEON, having in mind the possibility of seating a European Prince on an American throne—the throne of Mexico—wisely, so far as that went, proposed to confer the American crown not at all upon a Hohenzollern, but upon a Hapsburg, and offered it to the unhappy MAXIMILIAN, an Austrian Grand Duke. If any Confederate leader had been snob and fool and bad American enough, during the Civil War, to desire to offer the kingdom of his country to a European Princeling, he certainly would not have dreamed of offering it to a scion of the royalty of the second class Power that Prussia was then. He would have offered it to Austria, not to Prussia. True, LOUIS NAPOLEON "backed the wrong horse." When our Civil War ended in a manner contrary to his expectations and SHERIDAN was encamped with 75,000 veterans on the north side of the Rio Grande, and our State Department sent him word that he had really better withdraw the French Army, he wisely withdrew it. Poor MAXIMILIAN lingered precariously on until 1867, when the Mexicans killed him. And they would assuredly have killed him just the same, and perhaps more eagerly, if he had been a Hohenzollern instead of a Hapsburg. No larger and fresher and warmer mare's nest than this of "COL. HEROS VON BORKE" has been discovered by the acute and suspicious German press.

THE RIGHT TO LAUGH.

One by one the old adages lose point in application. "Laugh and the world laughs with you" still holds true in theory. But the experience of the man who was arrested for laughing in a theatre where others were enjoying themselves in tears appears as a contradiction. The man was fined by a magisterial Solomon, who appeare to have been of the opinion that the payment of a certain price for enjoyment does not necessarily carry with it a license for the individual to enjoy himself after his own peculiar fashion. Here is a nice question.

To the man who laughed the supposedly tragic happenings of the show were anything but tragic. As a matter of fact he regarded them as occasion for hilarious merriment. And when all is said and done who is to be the final arbiter of these matters?

Almost any night during an opera season one may see large and prosperous looking ladies expressing their inmost grief in rippling flights of song or denoting their secret sorrows in more or less graceful dance. To one unaccustomed to the way operatic this reversal of the ordinary human method of procedure might well seem the cue for laughter rather than for tears.

In the case in question the Magistrate presumably proceeded on the assumption that the prisoner's laughter disturbed others who had an equal right to enjoyment, even if their enjoyment took the form of tears. But there is another side to the shield. Could not the prisoner have urged with equal justice that having gone to the theatre for a pleasant evening of laughter he had a right to be protected from the depressing influence of snivelers?

The moral appears to be that if one wants to laugh one should stay away from the serious plays and patronize the comedies. But recent experiences on Broadway go to prove that the serious plays are often the funniest, and that the comedies are very often nearest tragedy. If a man is to be fined for laughing at some of the so-called seriousness of the theatre he ought in all justice to be rewarded for laughing at some of the so-called comedy.

"TRESPASSING" INSPECTORS.

Dr. THOMAS DARLINGTON'S Inspectors wearing his badge are trespassers, pure and simple. Farmere may safely pitch them into the highway, where they belong, badge and all, at the toe of a cowhide boot if necessary.—Mr. O. W. MAPES of the Dairymen's League.

So long as dairymen keep their stables clean and their cows free of disease, what possible quarrel can they have with Dr. DARLINGTON'S Inspectors? The Dairymen's League, of which Mr. MAPES is the leading spirit, proposes within six months to control all the milk supplied this city from New York State, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Connecticut. Its success may in a measure be prognosticated by the honesty of its ideals. Is the league organized to establish a monopoly of pure milk or of filthy milk?

The dishonorable discharge of Capt. LOUIS WENDEL of the First Battery was purposely made more impressive when Gov. HUGHES omitted the imposition of the small fine allowed by law. A gentleman and a soldier had disgraced himself. Cases of extortion and systematic "graft" among soldiers are happily so few that the deterrent effect of the Governor's discharge of Capt. WENDEL will for years make the repetition of such offenses in this State extremely unlikely.

A DISCOURAGING RESULT.

Consensus of New York Newspapers on the Thaw Case.

Most of the New York newspapers had editorial remarks yesterday on the outcome of the Thaw trial. Some few were conspicuous by their silence, but nearly all the editors who spoke reflected an evident and comprehensible discouragement at the conditions revealed or the weaknesses implied in current criminal procedure.

The Press is of opinion that "the simplicity of the issue in the Thaw murder case considered, two things about it are hard to account for:

"First, the unnecessary length of the trial.

"Second, the failure of the jury to agree on a verdict," and concludes: "The next trial will afford no temptation for any of the mistakes committed at this one, and no excuse for playing to the gallery. We can congratulate the community upon only one thing, that it has escaped the reproach it would have merited if a man who either should go to the madhouse or the death chair had been turned loose by aid of the fact that his victim was not all that he should have been."

The Tribune declares that "the failure of the Thaw jury to reach a verdict is a disappointing result," and adds: "No incident in the whole trial, revolting as much of it was to the moral sense, produced so disagreeable an impression on the community as the impossibility under the rules of evidence of defending a dead man's character against a charge of the basest villainy. There certainly justice failed. If that charge was a foul aspersion upon the slain man's memory, justice demanded its disproof. In saying this we have no disposition to criticise the court. Far from it, for we commend its patience, learning, and impartiality."

Further it says: "The District Attorney performed a genuine public service in his hard-headed riddling of that new and wonderful defense, dementia Americana. We recognize in this, thank Heaven, nothing of the typically American defense of womanly virtue and repute. There is, moreover, nothing of American chivalry in the sacrifice of the wife's character on the witness stand."

The Sun, at the conclusion of a two-column review of the testimony, the tendency of which is to reveal an opinion that Thaw is clearly a guilty and responsible person, thot his deed demands due punishment, remarks:

"Whatever be the future of this extraordinary case, it is fortunate that the time has not yet come when a jury of twelve men, sitting in this city, will acquit a man because his wife testifies that three years before the murder she made a confession to the murderer inculpating his victim, when it also appears that the murderer and the girl lived together for months after her confession before he finally married her!"

The World says: "The disagreement of the Thaw jury was not caused by the rhetoric of Mr. Delmas, or the tergiversations of Mr. Jerome, or the experts, or the hypothetical questions. It was simply the result of the different natures of the twelve men.

"Any average twelve men would unanimously convict for burglary or pocket-picking or murder by a yeggman. That is because everybody takes the same view of such things. But the shooting of White, while necessarily a crime of violence, was much more a crime of passion. Many passions combined—jealousy, rage, affection, envy, and a certain kind of timidity amounting to moral cowardice."

It is added that it was the jurors' "business to disagree if their consciences did not agree," and the conclusion is:

"The first Thow trial has been a grave scandal. The necessity of trying Thaw again carries with it the necessity of never again trying him or anybody else in a way that makes American criminal procedure an object of derision on two continents."

The Globe declares that it "may be solacing to lay the blame on the defendant's money," but says: "The unsatisfactory state of the criminal law—or rather its administration—is strikingly shown in the disposition to congratulate the community over the fact that the Thaw prosecution was able to escape complete fiasco. A court, whose cost is at the rate of $700 per day, wrestles for nearly four months with a case in essence simple and non-mysterious, and a mistrial is referred to in terms that imply that the result is better than was feared. 'The law is an ass,' said one somewhat famous commentator; certainly on the criminal side in New York it has revealed an ineffectiveness that emphasizes the need of radical reform."

The Evening Sun comments on the frankness with which the members of the jury have revealed the secrets of the jury room and adds: "This much of satisfaction is to be got out of the proceedings. Our part of the country is not yet prepared to accept the views on the subject of the unwritten law set forth with exotic and flamboyant eloquence, or what passes for such, by the leading counsel for the defense. And we shall not be surprised if quite a different took is taken by the lawyer for the accused in the next trial."

The Evening Mail calls the affair "a terrible example of the scandal and fatuity of our system of jurisprudence," and concludes thus: "Well, we shall have it all over again, with the theotrical properties a little frayed, some of the tinsel missing, some of the outlines blurred by repetition. And if there is a conviction we shall have it still again.—for the man with money to hire astute counsel can nearly always get an order for a new trial from the appellate courts. No, but it is objected, we shall be "aroused to action" and end the farce of the law's fatuities and delays. Unhappily we have had our lesson and profited not from it. For years we had a daily diet of Molineux. We shall have a daily diet of Thaw—who knows how long. 'It is to laugh.'—the laugh of disgust and self-scorn."

"We repeat," says The Evening Post, "that the long scandal of the Thaw trial will not have wrought its proper effect unless it lead to a determined effort to reform the criminal law of New York."

And it also says:

"If we could not have a conviction of Thaw, the fact that seven jurymen stood out to the end for a verdict of murder in the first degree is the next best thing. We shall hear no more of the assertion that a rich degenerate, touched with megalomania, can in New York kill a man in cold blood, even if that man be a libertine, and that then justice will have no terrors for him. It is refreshing to learn that the preposterous pleadings of Mr. Delmas had no effect upon the jury except to disgust them. Even those of them who voted for acquittal did so in the belief that Thaw was insane.

The Brooklyn Eagle is particularly displeased. It says: "Theoretically, the law is as cold as an iceberg. It was at freezing point, as formulated by the trial Judge. He endeavored to give his temperature to the jurors, but as it turned out, he might as well have run all the gamut of emotions. As it turned out, five of the jurors might as well have had in mind, while it was being delivered, not the charge, but what the wild waves were saying. They adopted as a substitute for every word spoken from the bench, the unwritten law," adding bitterly:

"Matters would have been much simplified had the jury tried the murdered man instead of his murderer. His character was anything but stainless. His offenses were rank enough to smell to Heaven. However, it is not altogether clear that White was not tried and convicted, while it is altogether clear that Thaw will not be troubled much longer. In a few months he will be seen, possibly in the theatre in which he played a part not on the programme."

INDORSE TIMES'S VIEW.

Readers Express Ideas of Needed Reforms in Next Trial.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is simply a public duty to write you a line to thank you for that altogether admirable editorial on the Thaw case in this morning's Times. When the country is being disgraced before the whole world, it is some consolation to have the views and feelings of the decent part of the community so forcibly and fitly expressed. That editorial is the best piece of work I have seen in many a day. I am profoundly grateful for it.

A Sincere Compliment.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

You are to be complimented for your sensible, able editorial, "The Thaw Disagreement," in this morning's paper. It certainly is a relief after the silly effusions of the women reporters in some of the New York dailies.

Hope for Reform in Next Trial.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial this morning on the Thaw disagreement is so good that I wish to express my thanks to you for stating plain but important facts in such a convincing and still perfectly common-sense way. I earnestly believe that no person can find as good or better statement of the Thaw trial in any other newspaper in New York. May what you express hope of be accomplished when the case is taken up again for the second, and as we hope the last time.

Says It Was a Costly Jury.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Make the Thaw jurors "immune" from jury duty? To be sure! "J. W. E." in THE TIMES of the 13th is right. These men should be exempt from further duty as jurors. Oh, Lord, certainly! Never put them in the jury box again. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars has been thrown away on them already. Oh, for the opinion of Cap'n Jack Bunsby!

For Reform In Expert Evidence.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I desire to commend most fully your editorial in tais morning's TIMES regarding the Thaw trial. It is not only a calm, dispassionate, and judicial presentation of the trial, but its conclusions are irresistible. If you will give us another equally good upon the necessity of reform in the matter of so-called expert evidence in criminal prosecutions you will be doing another equally good act.

I feel that every practitioner of medicine has reason to feel ashamed at the exhibition of one so-called "medical expert" who recently figured in the case; one who swore to tell "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," but whose whole testimony under the cross-examination of the District Attorney was a mass of evasions, quibbles, and side steppings in an effort to evade the truth. In my judgment medical experts in at least all capital cases should be selected not by the prosecution or the defense, but by the court; and they should be men who could neither be purchased by wealthy criminal defendants or moved by public clamor, but men who are as judicial as the Judge himself. Then the term "medical expert" will excite neither derision nor invidious comment, punishment or acquittal will be more speedy, taxpayers will feel that economy is the watchword, and justice more promptly administered.

MR. BREARLEY ANSWERS THAW

Defends Fellow-Juror, Mr. Bolton, Whom Thaw Criticised.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have just read a statement by Harry Thaw containing the following:

"I believe that every man in the jury possessing over average intelligence, excepting possibly Mr. Bolton, comprehended the weight of evidence and halloted for acquittal."

With much natural sympathy for a man in Thaw's trying position I still must take exception to his singling out Mr. Bolton so strangely. Certainly none of the jurors brought to the case a clearer head, a fairer mind, or greater conscientiousness than did Mr. Bolton, and none other was called upon to pay so terrible a price for his service to the State.

Thaw's statement about Mr. Bolton and about the balloting must have been based upon misinformation.

The Press Regards the Thaw Mistrial as Unfortunate but Natural.

From The Philadelphia Record.

There is no particular fault to be found with the jury in the Thaw case. It is the method of conducting criminal trials, the befuddlement of jurors by the abstruse disputations of experts continued for days and weeks, the long-winded arguments of technical points in the law of evidence, the banalities and melodramatics—it is these and like abuses that make our criminal procedure a scandal.

From The Baltimore Sun.

Let us at least be thankful we are done with the case for a time, at least, and that the prisoner has not been turned loose on the community to do again as he pleases—a thankfulness which roof-garden audiences and assemblages of persons on pleasure bent may well share, in view of the danger connected with all public entertainments if gentlemen like Mr. Thaw are to be permitted to shoot at their enemies without let or hindrance at such gatherings.

From The Springfield Republican.

It is a miscarriage of justice which we see, and little more fortunate for the coarsely gilded youth involved than for society. It may be that the world is well rid of a man such as Stanford White is represented to have been; but it is quite as certain that Harry Thaw is of no use to the world as he is or as he has been, and nothing would be better calculated to make him of value to society than a somewhat protracted term in prison at honest labor and for sober reflection.

From The Philadelphia Enquirer.

The jury in the Thaw case have failed to agree. It is not astonishing under the circumstances, for if ever jurors were mixed up by the prosecution, this was the time.

We presume that all these weary lengths of testimony will have to be gone over again, but before the next trial is called it is to be hoped that Jerome will join the circus, for there is where he plainly belongs. He would shine as an artist in the double back somersault act.

From The Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Another consideration that will have weight with those who believed that the so-called "unwritten law" had and could have no application in such a case as Thaw's is that the disagreement reveals the fact that the jury was not influenced by that dangerous appeal to their passions and their sympathies.

From The Philadelphia Press.

Trial by jury had a too severe strain put upon it in the trial of Hary K. Thaw, and it failed. The jury divided, as men outside of the jury divided, not as to the fact of the killing, as to which there is no dispute, but as to the degree of responsibility. On this experts differed and the lawyers differed, and while the mistrial is unfortunate and regrettable, it is, all things considered, the most natural result of this long and confusing trial.

MR. BERKMAN SPEAKS UP.

Has Not Clashed with "Union Rules," but Will Not Exploit Labor.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial of April 12 has just been called to my attention. Permit me to correct your impression that I have "evidently been having an encounter with 'union rules.'" Nothing of the kind. I had been conducting a job printing establishment on a union basis. My relations with the union were of the most friendly character; realizing, however, that modern business methods—the result of competition in trade and labor—necessitate exploitation, I quit my business, since I am opposed to the exploitation of labor—even according to union rules.

The affair has absolutely no relation to Mother Earth, our Anarchist monthly.

You say that "the episode proves that anarchy must beat or be beaten by labor in its modern, organized form." You are perfectly right if you mean that an honest man cannot exist under capitalistic conditions except he exploit or be exploited.

I admire your perspicacity when you remark: "Presumably he thinks that he must live." And your interest in my well-being is rather flattering: "What is he going to do?"

Why, my dear editor, 'tis quite simple. I shall keep on thinking that I must live, and by industrial and faithful thinking to that end I shall accomplish my aim—ask Mrs. Eddy.

EGYPTIAN EDITOR PROTESTS.

He Thinks Too Much Credit Is Given to Lord Cromer.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Along with the telegram which you have received from London in regard to the resignation of Lord Cromer, you have alluded to the works and improvements which he has made in Egypt, and stated that "the rights of property are for the first time in the history of modern Egypt recognized by law." The truth is that the rights of property were recognized by law before Lord Cromer came to Egypt. The history of Egypt proves this statement since the days of Mohammed Ali Pasha, the first Khedive.

The improvement in irrigation which you have also attributed to Lord Cromer is the result of a bill introduced by ex-Prime Minister Riad Pasha before the British occupation of Egypt.

Credit Where Credit Is Due.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I notice in your columns of to-day's date an editorial in which it is stated that the Municipal Court bill was drafted by Julius Henry Cohen, Esq.

In order that justice may be done where justice is due, I wish to call your attention to a letter in The Law Journal of March 4 last, in the course of which Mr. Cohen, the Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the Citizens' Union, stated as follows toward the end of his communication:

"After conferring with the Judges, considering carefully all the suggestions made by members of the bar, the subcommittee, consisting of Laurence A. Tanzer as Chairman, Robert Van Iderstein, and Clarence M. Lewis, has prepared a bill, which, after receiving the consideration of the full Committee on Legislation, has been approved, and its introduction authorized."

It thus appeare that this committee comprises the gentlemen who actually drafted the bill, although themselves a subcommittee of that of which Mr. Cohen is Chairman. While undoubtedly the entire committee must have carefully gone over the bill, it seems that, judging by this letter referred to, the actual draft was made by the subcommittee.

The Real Thing.

THE EAST SIDE.

Five feet deep is the roaring river between steep cliffs of red,
Boiling with foam of human faces, swirling in eddies and spread
Far through the side streets, through the doorways, in every cranny a face—
O floods, hot with the red rushed blood of a vast and vanishing race!

Here are the prophets that walked in the desert, beholding in vision God,
Here is David with dreaming face, psalming the night, that, starr'd,
Darts down ten rays through the canyon rift that drown in the gold gas-fire,
And here is Ruth with great black eyes, weird with her fierce desire.

Here, breathing on the narrow stoops, soule purged with blood-ahlution,
Slipped from the coil of Russia's hugs world-writhings of revolution,
Sit the gaunt, thin, and meagre-eyed, a-pulse with New York's strong eth,
Clothing themselves in the warming crowds of dream'd America!

But who are these that from the white building all window-lit, superb,
Come pouring, panting, through the doors, laugbing along the curb—
Girls glorious-eyed, alert, self-poised, with splendid daring feet,
Boys with the eagle glance, with blood tuned to New York's blood-beat?

O School, O splendid foundry-fire, from which fresh souls are cast,
Molded into Americans, yet saving from the Past
Character scourged with whips of Kings and stress of martyred flesh,
And sweat of intellectual strength that builds the world afresh!

You people that long have vision'd Zion, and yearned across waste seas,
Here is the Zion of Zion, your City, whose viewless destinies
Drink you as blood into her heart, so that her Fate and yours
Are one; your nation dies, your soul, mixed with her soul, endures.

MISS KOBBE TO WED HERMAN LIVINGSTON

Wedding Will Probably Take Place in the Fall — Four Other Engagements.

MISS HALL TO BE MARRIED

She Will Become Wife of Reginald C. Robbins of Boston—W. D. Vanderbilt Betrothed to Miss Sanderson.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Kobbé announced last week the engagement of their only daughter, Miss Olga Kobbé, to Herman Livingston, Jr., of Oak Hill-on-the-Hudson, and New York. Miss Kobbé, who made her début several years ago, is a cousin of the Misses Alice and Louise Kobbé, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. George C. Kobbé.

Mr. Livingston is a son of the late Herman T. Livingston and of Mrs. Livingston, who was Miss Susan Bard Rogers of Oak Hill and Washington Square, and is a graduate of Williams College, class of '05. His younger brother, Henry H. Livingston, is a student at Yale.

No date has been set for the wedding, but it will probably take place in the Autumn.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Jane Ruthven Hall, daughter of Mrs. Henry B. Hall of 107 East Sixty-fifth Street, to Reginald Chauncey Robbins of Boston. Mr. Robbins is a member of the Manchester Yacht, the Myopia, the Middlesex Hunt, St. Botolph, and New Riding Clubs, and a Harvard graduate, class of '02. The marriage will take place in May.

Formal announcement was made last Tuesday of the engagement of Miss Nina Almirall, author of a novel called "The Master Feeling," and a writer of verse, to William Royall of Raleigh, N. C. Many New Yorkers at the Resort—Miss Hammond Writes a Playlet.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., April 13.—A playlet written by Miss Betty Hammond, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Hays Hammond of New York, will be produced for the first time at an entertainment which the young women of the villa colony are planning for the benefit of St. Barnabas's Hospital, an institution established here recently by the Sisters of St. Joseph. The entertainment will be given in the theatre of the Lakewood Hotel, and rehearsals will begin next week.

James Lane Allen, the author, has taken apartments at the Lakewood Hotel for the remainder of the Spring season.

Miss Irene Untermyer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Untermyer, was the guest of friends at the Lakewood Hotel this week. Miss Untermyer's marriage to Louis Putnam Myers, which takes place at Greystone-on-the-Hudson on April 27, will be a notable event in society. Three special trains will transport the guests from New York to Greystone.

Horseback riding has grown in popularity here since two young women staying at the Lakewood Hotel, who were devoted to this pastime, announced their engagements this week. They are Miss Louise Strong of Cleveland, Ohio, and Miss Alice Sherman of Baltimore. Both are accomplished horsewomen. Their courtships were on horseback. They were members of a merry party that left the hotel every pleasant morning during the last fortnight for a gallop through the pines.

Among the New Yorkers who have taken apartments at the Laurel House for the remainder of the Spring season are Mr. and Mrs. John H. Flagler, Mr. and Mrs. B. Sherman Fowler, and Mr. and Mrs. James J. Higginson. From Chicago are registered Mr. and Mrs. James B. Forgan. Mr. Forgan is President of the First National Bank of Chicago.

FOOD.

DIZZINESS.

Relieved by Simple Change of Food.

A very common cause of dizziness is the poisonous material that results from imperfect digestion.

When the stomach is unable to digest the food because of its being eaten too fast or because it is of the indigestible sort, part of it lies in the stomach and ferments, producing gas and bacteria.

These bacteria (microbes) then manufacture more or less poison which is absorbed into the blood along with what little food is already digested, and the result is a bad headache, irritability, dullness of intellect, and lack of energy.

Don't get into the habit of taking medicine for such a condition, or if you've formed the habit, quit it.

Look to your food as a N. Y. man did. He says:

"For six years I suffered with acute attacks of indigestion and dyspepsia, which usually affected me directly after eating or within an hour. I would become dizzy with a sensation of being about to faint.

"These attacks usually lasted two or three minutes, sometimes accompanied with vomiting. (The effects of poison produced by undigested food and bacteria.) Between these acute attacks I suffered much pain from indigestion and bloating.

"I tried about every known remedy for my troubles, but got only temporary relief. Then I tried Grape-Nuts. This food certainly commends itself to a delicate appetite with a gentle persuasiveness that is peculiar to itself.

Grape-Nuts food agreed with me from the first. I am now entirely cured and I most heartily recommend it to all who suffer from stomach trouble.

The nutritive value of Grape-Nuts is shown by the fact that, as an Electrical Machinist, I eat nothing but Grape-Nuts and a piece of toast for breakfast, then keep on my feet all day without excessive fatigue.

"I consider this food has more hard work in it, more strength-giving qualities, more satisfaction to the eater, and more every-day health, than any other cereal food made to-day." ELSIE JANIS SUED BY HER MANAGERS

They Seek an Injunction Restraining Her from Leaving "The Vanderbilt Cup."

WANT CONTRACT UPHELD

Milton Aborn, Sargent Aborn, Theodore A. Liebler, and George C. Tyler the Petitioners.

Argument was heard by Supreme Court Justice Bischoff yesterday on a motion made by Milton Aborn, Sargent Aborn, Theodore A. Liebler, and George C. Tyler, for an injunction restraining Elsie Janis, now playing in the "Vanderbilt Cup," from terminating her contract with them. It is alleged that Miss Janis, who is now receiving $725 a week from the plaintiffs, and whose salary will be increased to $800 next year, has received an offer of $3,000 a week from Percy G. Williams to appear in vaudeville, and for that reason desires to cancel her present contract. This contract was made with Miss Janis's mother, who has been appointed her guardian.

The attorney for Miss Janis presented a letter received by her from George C. Tyler in response to one she had written, objecting to the discharge of Henry Donnelly from her company. He had been dismissed, it was said, because the expense of the company were too high. The letter, in part, said:

Dear Little Lady: Your letter would bring tears from a stone, but, truly, I am not one. I know you think so, but, honestly and truly, I am not. So why do you write me these little Santa Claus notes, begging the dear, kind, good man to bring you a stocking full of presents for you to look upon early in the morning?

But there is a smile that goes with the tear when I read that you want to pay your ten per cent. of dear old poverty stricken Henry Donnelly's salary in order that he may remain with you. I wonder if he would take it from you? Do you mind my writing him and asking if he would remain if Elsie paid him ten per cent. of his salary and Liebler & Co. the balance?

It is awfully sweet of you to sympathize with the poverty-stricken condition of Liebler & Co. and to offer your little mite toward getting them out of the hole. Truly I appreciate it, but I had rather receive this benefit from the Aborns.

As to Liebler & Co. "furnishing the support that a young star needs and should have," I hardly think you meant what you said, but if you do, I can only answer that if a young star cannot get along with a supporting salary of $2,000 a week instead of $3,000, why, then, it is up to the management to get her another play. Fooled you, didn't I?

The lawyer for Miss Janis contended that the contract was void because Miss Janis was an apprentice, and the contract with her mother did not include provisions for board, food, and medical attendance. The attorney for the plaintiffs declared that Miss Janis is not an apprentice, but a mistress of the art of acting, and, besides, with a salary of $725, she should be reasonably expected to supply her own food, lodging, and medical attendance, especially as her contract provided that her mother should accompany her, and she had a maid who received $50 a week.

Decision was reserved.

HATTIE WILLIAMS SUES.

Wants a Magazine Restrained from Printing Her Picture.

An action was begun yesterday on behalf of Hattie Williams, star of the "Little Cherub" company, to restrain Funk & Wagnalls from printing her picture in the magazine known as The Circle. She alleges that the publishing firm, without her consent, printed an advertisement containing her picture. The advertisement, she declares, would injure her in her profession, and would "hold her up to ridicule and scorn."

Application was made to Justice Bischoff yesterday for a temporary injunction. Decision was reserved.

TO ACT MAETERLINCK PLAY.

Miss Parsenow to be Seen in "The Death of Tintagiles."

An arrangement has been made by the Modern Theatre to give, under the auspices of the Theatregoers' Club, a series of plays on Sunday evenings. The first of these productions will take place at Duryea's, 200 West Seventy-second Street, on Sunday evening, April 21. "The Death of Tintagiles," by Maurice Maeterlinck, will be the first of these productions, and Miss Kete Parsenow, who appeared in the play at the Berkeley Theatre about two years ago, will again play Ygraine.

LAST WEEK OF THE CIRCUS.

Buffalo Bill's "Wild West" to Follow at the Garden.

After next Saturday night's performance of the Barnum & Bailey Circus the big show will vacate the Garden and Buffalo Bill's Wild West will move in. The circus will then start upon its tour of the country. Wild West will open here for the first engagement in this city in five years.

The opening performance of Buffalo Bill's show will be given on Tuesday evening, April 23, seventy-two hours after the organization moves in. Meanwhile the organization is rehearsing at Winter quarters in Bridgeport in the open air. The bucking bronchos and other horses to be used in Buffalo Bill's exhibition are all new this year. When they make their début it is anticipated that real "Wild West" shows will be given by the ill-tempered buckers when once they come before an audience, under electric lights and within the confines of an inclosure.

Col. Cody has been abroad for five years, giving exhibitions in Europe, and his opening performance at the Garden will be in the nature of a welcome home. During his tour abroad may new features were added.

Some 6,000 seats have been set aside for the orphans' day circus performance of Tuesday afternoon. The children will be out in force, and many of the charitable institutions represented will be accompanied by bands and drum corps.

NEW DAVENPORT THEATRE.

Structure to be Erected in West 63d Street—To Cost $150,000.

One of the new theatres announced some months ago is about to become a reality. Plans were filed yesterday in the Building Department for a theatre to be built at a cost of $150,000, at 22, 24, and 26 West Sixty-third Street.

This theatre is being built for Butler Davenport of the real estate firm of Davenport & Laighton, with offices at 66 West Thirty-eighth Street. The building is to have a frontage of sixty feet and a depth of ninety feet, and will be three stories high. The design calls for wide entrance doors and a porch above the first story, decorated with Ionic columns.

The theatre is small, and will have a total seating capacity of only 856. The parquette will accommodate 355, the balcony, 270, and the gallery, 231. It is expected that work will be begun on the structure almost immediately, with the purpose of finishing the building by Autumn.

The general impression among theatrical men last night seemed to be that the new theatre was to be devoted to a high class stock company, though no definite announcement of attractions has been made. Mr. Davenport is said to be particularly interested in theatrical affairs.

HARRY LINDLEY FINED.

Manager of "The Squaw Man" Company Violated Child Labor Law.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., April 13.—Harry Lindley, manager of "The Squaw Man" Company, which appeared at a local theatre last night, was fined $25 in the District Court to-day for violating the law forbidding the employment of children under 14 years old after 7 o'clock in the evening. The authorities forbade the appearance of a ten-year-old child last night. The management decided to employ the child and take the consequences.

According to a statement made by William Faversham the prosecution was due to a discharged member of the company, who complained to Gov. Guild. The Governor, according to his custom, referred the matter to the district police for investigation.

Midshipman Amsden Has Typhoid.

BALTIMORE, April 13.—Midshipman W. F. Amsden of Abilene, Kan., is ill of typhoid fever in the University Hospital here. His condition was said to be satisfactory to-day. Young Amsden came here from Annapolis two days ago to have his eyes treated, when he was taken ill.

A GABRILOWITSCH TRIUMPH.

Big Audience Wildly Enthusiastic at Mendelssohn Hall Recital.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch gave a piano recital yesterday afternoon before possibly the largest audience that has assembled in Mendelssohn Hall this season. Every seat was filled, and many persons were standing at the back. After the completion of the regular programme the audience surged to the front, waved handkerchiefs and programmes, and applauded vociferously, while the pianist added number after number, many of them selected by the audience. It was an occasion which had the flavor of one of the old Paderewski recitals.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch is an artist who deserves his success. He is the most interesting pianist who has appeared in America this season, and each new appearance, either with an orchestra or at a recital, confirms the good opinion often expressed in these columns of his merits as an artist. He is a virile player, and yet he never loses sight of the poetic side. His touch almost recalls de Pachmann, and he has brains.

Yesterday afternoon he commenced the programme with Bach's Prelude and Fugue in B minor, which he followed with Schubert's A minor sonata, a rarely played work, which he presented with such effect as to make it most fascinating. Three Chopin numbers followed, and for his third group Gabrilowitsch resurrected four of the Mendelssohn "Songs Without Words." The printed programme ended with four Russian pieces, Paderewski's Caprice, after the manner of Scarlatti; a gavotte by Glazounow, Arensky's "Près de la Mer," which recalled Mendelssohn, and the pianist's own Thème varié." Afterward came the impromptu programme.

CHICAGO, April 13.—The Metropolitan Grand Opera Company closed a successful week's engagement to-night with the production of "Haensel and Gretel" and "I Pagliacci." Two matinées and six night performances were given in the week.

From a financial standpoint the engagement was one of the most profitable ever given at the Auditorium Theatre, the total receipts for the eight performances amounting to $83,000.

"Rigoletto" Again at the Manhattan.

Verdi's "Rigoletto," one of the most popular bills of the season, was given again to a large audience at the Manhattan Opera House yesterday afternoon, with a cast which has appeared in it often before, including Mme. Pinkert and Messrs. Bonci and Sammarco. Mr. Gilbert was the Monterone and Mr. Campanini conducted.

Packed House for "Les Huguenots."

"The Huguenots" was sung last night at the Manhattan Opera House. The galleries were packed, and the first floor was well filled. Mmes. Ruas, de Cisneros, and Zeppilli, and Mesars. Bassi, Arimondi, Ancona, and Sevelhac appeared in the principal roles. Mr. Campanini conducted, and Mlle. Dazie and the ballet danced.

To Increase Peter's Pence.

ROME, April 13.—A report received here of the doings of American Archbishops now in session at Washington says that they have taken up with unusual vigor the question of increasing the Peter's pence contributions. It has been decided that these must be the concerted work of the entire hierarchy and not of any individual or party.

The Vatican hopes that the total of these contributions from America will reach $500,000.

PRELUDE TO PEACE CONGRESS TO-NIGHT

Choral Service at Carnegie Hall Will Inaugurate the Arbitration Meeting.

PUBLIC ADMITTED FREE

Prominent Men and Women of Many Lands to Discuss Conciliation This Week.

The first National Arbitration and Peace Congress to be held in this country will begin this evening with a preliminary choral service in Carnegie Hall, where the regular sessions will be held on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of this week. To-morrow at 3 o'clock the first deliberative session will be held, and from that hour on a score of foreign visitors and hundreds of officials, legislators, professional men and men and women who have devoted their energies to the cause of International peace will labor to agree on certain vital points that concern all nations and the settlement of which is of fundamental importance to the proposed arbitration scheme.

Preparations have been making for many months for the events of the next four days. Foreigners from all parts of the world have journeyed to this city to take part in the debates and discussions that will ensue and to listen to the views of others who are interested in the great question. Literature explaining the aim of the congress has been scattered broadcast, and the co-operation of prominent men in every walk of life has been obtained. The congress will be cosmopolitan in every sense, and it is hoped that the proceedings will result in a long step toward the goal which those behind the movement believe means so much for all mankind.

The programme for the choral service this evening was completed yesterday. The choral and instrumental music will be under the direction of Dr. Frank Damrosch, and the Oratorio Society will take a prominent part. Mrs. Hilsen de Moss will be the vocal soloist and David Mannes the violinist. The following arrangement of music has been selected:

Finale from "Reformation Symphony" ..... Mendelssohn
(a) Chorale: "Sleepless Wake"; (b) "How Lovely Are the Messengers" from "St. Paul" ..... Mendelssohn
Hymn: "God of Our Fathers, Whose Almighty Hand" ..... Roberts-Warren
(a) Pastoral symphony; (b) recitative: "There Were Shepherds"; (c) chorus: "Glory to God"; (d) soprano solo: "Rejoice Greatly"; (e) halleluiah chorus from "The Messiah" ..... Handel
(a) "How Lovely Is Thy Dwelling Place" (b) "Ye Now Are Sorrowful" ..... Brahms
Largo for solo violin, harp, and string orchestra ..... Handel
(a) Chorus of Messengers of Peace from "Rienzi" ..... Wagner
(b) "Hymn of Thanks," Old Netherland folk song, arranged by Kremser.

Among the speakers will be Bishop Potter, the Right Rev. John Murphy Barley, Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch, and the Rev. Charles E. Jefferson.

It is expected that a very large number of the delegates to the congress will attend the services. There are already a great many in the city, most of the foreign visitors having come some time ago as Andrew Carnegie's guests, to be present at the dedication of the Carnegie Institute in Pittsburg on April 11.

Public Admitted Free.

Both at the choral service to-night and at all the regular sessions of the congress the public will be admitted free. The parquet of the hall and two rows of boxes have been reserved for the thousand or more delegates, who will pay for their seats. The rest of the hall will be open to all, and it is the hope of the committees having charge of the arrangements that the general public will show a strong interest in the movement and turn out in large numbers.

First come, first served will be the order at all sessions. To obtain admission it will be necessary only to apply at the offices of the congress, in the Carnegie Hall building, for tickets, which will be issued freely to all those who apply until the capacity of the hall is reached.

Mr. Carnegie, as the foremost advocate of international peace in this country, will preside at the opening meeting to be held to-morrow afternoon. The provisional programme gives no special topic for discussion at that meeting, but great interest attaches to it, nevertheless, as Secretary of State Root, Gov. Hughes, and Mayor McClellan will be the chief speakers.

"International control" of the peace movement" will be discussed at the evening session to-morrow and many of the foreign visitors will speak. Among these will be Baron d'Estournelles de Constant, the French Senator; Baron Descamps of Belgium, Maarten Maartens of Holland, Prof. Hugo Munsterberg of Germany, and Sir Robert Cranston and William T. Stead of Great Britain.

After the first regular day sessions of some sort will be held morning, afternoon, and night. The session on Tuesday morning will deal with "Women's Relation to the Peace Movement." In the afternoon there will be two sessions, one at Carnegie Hall and the other at the Hotel Astor. The first mentioned will be a young people's meeting, and at the second the commercial, industrial, and agricultural aspects of the peace movement will be discussed. Two meetings will be held on Tuesday evening, one at Carnegie Hall, denoted a "University Meeting," and the other at Cooper Union, discussing "Organized Labor In Relation to the Peace Movement."

On Wednesday afternoon the topic to be discussed is "Legislative and Judicial Aspects of the Peace Movement." And on Wednesday evening the congress will wind up with a public dinner. In addition to the lengthy programme given there will be a reception of guests at the City Club, 55 West Forty-fourth Street, tomorrow evening, between 1 o'clock and 2:30, a reception and luncheon at the same hours on Tuesday at the Barnard Club, 343 Avenue nr Fifty-sixth Street, and two conferences on Wednesday, a general one in Carnegie Hall at 10:30, and one of the delegates from women's organizations at the Tabernacle Church at 9:30.

WOMAN'S PART IN PEACE.

Many Notable American Women to Speak at Two Meetings.

Many representative women are to take part in two special meetings which will form a part of the Peace Congress. The first of these will be held on Tuesday morning at Carnegie Hall at 10:30. Mrs. Anna Garlin Spencer, Vice President of the American Peace Society, member of the Executive Committee of the New York Peace Society, and who represents the Society for Ethical Culture in the congress, will preside.

Julia Ward Howe, who inaugurated the first woman's peace movement in the United States, will be present and speak for a few minutes. Mrs. May Wright Sewall, Chairman of the Peace Department in the National and International Councils, will also be a guest of honor, and her account of the organization of the women of nineteen of the enlightened nations for universal peace will be presented in a printed report.

Mrs. Lucia Ames Mead of Boston, Mrs. Ellen M. Henrotin, ex-President of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; Miss Mary E. D. H. CHAMBERLAIN DEAD.

He Was Governor of South Carolina in the Reconstruction Era.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., April 13.—Daniel H. Chamberlain, who was Governor of South Carolina immediately following the reconstruction era, died to-day at the home of William C. Chamberlain, near the University of Virginia. He was taken ill with cancer of the stomach last Fall, upon his return from a trip to Egypt. He had recently disposed of his properties in Massachusetts with a view to locating in Virginia. He was a graduate of Yale, and was 72 years old.

Daniel Henry Chamberlain was born in West Brookfield, Mass. His early life was passed on his father's farm and in attending the common schools of his native town. In 1854 he passed part of the year at the Phillips Exeter Academy, and taught school in the Winter. In 1862 he was graduated from Yale with the highest honors in oratory and English composition. He entered the Harvard Law School, but did not finish the course on account of his desire to enter the army. He received a Lieutenant's commission, and served until the close of the war.

In the Fall of 1867 he was chosen a member of the Constitutional Convention called under the Reconstruction act. Later he became Attorney General, and held that position for four years. He was elected Governor of South Carolina in 1874, and served for three years.

He moved to this city, and practiced law until 1899. When Cornell University established a Law School, he became Professor of American Constitutional Law in the institution.

FUNERAL OF GEN. GRIFFIN.

Last Honors Paid by Cadets to a West Point Graduate of 1875.

The funeral of Brig. Gen. Eugene Griffin, who died of apoplexy in Schenectady on the evening of April 10, was held in the Church of the Transfiguration yesterday at noon. After the services at the church the body was taken to West Point and buried with full military honors due to his rank. The final portion of the burial services was conducted by Dr. Goodwin, who officiated at the wedding of Gen. Griffin on Governors Island in 1879.

The funeral was in charge of the Rev. F. W. White. The pallbearers were: C. A. Coffin, President General Electric Company; Col. H. L. Scott, Superintendent West Point Military Academy; Hinsdill Parsons, Fourth Vice President General Electric Company; E. E. Sunny, Western Manager General Electric Company; Col. H. F. Hodges, Major of Engineers, Washington; H. R. Bishop, S. M. Hamill, and Dr. Louis Seaman, New York.

Gen. Griffin was graduated from West Point in 1875, and a full corps of cadets acted as an escort at the burial. As the procession left the chapel eleven minute guns were fired, and after the salute at the grave a second salute of honor was given. All flags at West Point were half masted. Col. Scott, the present Superintendent of the post, was a classmate of Gen. Griffin.

GIOVANNI FRANCHI DEAD.

Greenwich Village Philanthropist Buried in a Coffin Valued at $2,500.

Giovanni Franchi, the philanthropist of Greenwich Village, was buried yesterday in Calvary Cemetery. The funeral services were held in the Church of St. Anthony, in Sullivan, near Houston Street. The auditorium was crowded to the doors by many persons, who had enjoyed the charity of Franchi. The body was taken to the cemetery in a coffin of bronze valued at $2,500. This lavish expenditure was made despite the fact that the old man had ordered that he should be given the simplest kind of a funeral.

Franchi was born in Parmigiani, in the Province of Genoa, about 70 years ago. He came here a penniless boy and settled in Greenwich Village. The inhabitants of the little colony in the old Ninth Ward were all Irish then, but the Italian persevered and prospered. He got his start by buying out a small saloon. This led to more purchases of the same kind.

Then he built a silk mill in West Hoboken, which brought him a fortune. Finally he speculated in real estate, until to-day half of West Hoboken and many pieces of property in Manhattan and Brooklyn stand in his name. When he became wealthy he began to help those in want. His house at 21 Macdougal Street was besieged daily by the needy. He leaves a widow, Angela Franchi.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Dr. Justin L. Barnes.

Dr. Justin L. Barnes, an oculist, died at his home, 616 Madison Avenue, yesterday. He was 47 years old. In 1881 he was graduated from Cornell University, and four years later he finished the medical course at New York University.

Since that time he had practiced his profession in this city, being connected with many medical organizations. He was assistant surgeon of the Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital and a member of the Medical Society of the County of New York, the Physicians' Mutual Aid Association, and the New York Academy of Medicine.

He leaves two sons. The funreal will probably take place in Cornwall, N. Y.

BUTTE BANKS EASY ON THE DEPOSITORS

President Largey of Heinze Bank Says Allowing Overdrafts Was Common.

HODGENS HEARING ENDS

F. Augustus Heinz Says Hodgens Made Him Submit to Many Unjust Conditions.

M. Sellers Largey, now 27 years old, who spends seven months of the year in Butte, Mont., attending to the duties of President of the State Savings Bank and the rest of his time in New York, was called to the witness stand in the Hodgens-United Copper case late yesterday afternoon and proved in some respects a very interesting witness. It was the final session in the taking of testimony upon which the application of Thomas M. Hodgens to get access to the United Copper Company's books will be decided by the New Jersey Supreme Court. An early decision is expected.

The youthful bank President was produced as a witness for the Heinze side of the matter. He went into the Presidency of the State Savings Bank, which has figured so largely in the proceedings, when Hodgens resigned as cashier, and F. A. Heinze, who had been the actual owner of the majority stock from 1901, came into the working control of the institution. The Heinze counsel produced him to tell about how Hodgens ran the bank for three years previously in which Largey had been a Director, and also of the condition of things when the management changed, which has been made the basis for an action in the Federal Courts here looking to an accounting by Hodgens.

To this end M. Sellers Largey declared that from the time he entered the directorate down to shortly before Mr. Hodgens retired, the latter had acted as if he were actually the controlling owner of the bank, and that the Board of Directors, or most of them, had proceeded upon that assumption. Forthwith F. J. Foulks of Newark, who was conducting the examination, asked Largey what he knew of the ownership of the bank of $50,000 of the bonds of a lighting company of which Mr. Hodgens was President.

Wouldn't Buy Hodgens's Bonds.

Largey said that Mr. Hodgens had unsuccessfully offered the bonds to him personally some eighteen months before he discovered that the bank had them among its securities.

Then, declared the witness, a short time before the retirement of Mr. Hodgens, a committee was appointed to examine the bank's affairs at Mr. Hodgens's instigation ,and following the adoption of this committee's report a resolution was passed by the directors which Largey terned a "whitewashing resolution."

The vote on the resolution was 4 to 3, Largey voting with the minority. Speaking of the general banking practice in Butte, he said that it was a common thing for banks there to allow overdrafts and carry the checks in place of loans. When it came to cross-examination, T. J. Walsh, counsel for Mr. Hodgens, took up the question of the whitewashing resolution and developed that, while the witness voted against it, he had just previously voted, in company with all the other Directors, an indorsement of a report of the investigating committee, which wound up by coromending warmly the work of Mr. Hodgens in building up the State Savings Bank. Then Mr. Walsh got to personalities.

"How old were you when elected a Director?" he asked.

Youthful Bank President.

"Twenty-two," replied the witness.

"So you are 27 now?"

"Yes," was the reply.

"How much stock do you own in the bank?"

Mr. Faulks objected and the witness refused to answer.

"Will you say that it is in excess of thirteen shares?" persisted Mr. Walsh.

Again there was an objection and a refusal.

"To what extent are you indebted to the bank?" came from Mr. Walsh, but with the same result.

"We are prepared to show," said the attorney for Mr. Hodgens, "that this witness owns but thirteen shares of stock in the bank and is at the present time largely indebted to it."

This brought an immediate objection from Mr. Faulks.

"That is a highly improper statement for counsel to make," he began. "He has no right at all to pry into the private affairs of this witness when the witness has refused to testify about them."

But Mr. Walsh was not done.

"When were you last in Butte?" he asked.

"On Feb. 16," was the reply.

"You have been in New York ever since?"

The answer was in the affirmative, but Mr. Largey would not say whether he was engaged in business here.

"I am desirous of ascertaining," continued the lawyer, "how much time you devote to the bank?"

"All the time I am in Butte," said Largey, "about seven months in the year."

The lawyer shifted his questions.

Things He Didn't Know.

"What are those lighting bonds that you say Mr. Hodgen's tried to sell to you before the bank got them, worth today?" he demanded. Largey said he did not know.

"Are they worth par?"

"I don't know," was the reply.

"Are not they worth more than par?"

"I don't know," came back the answer.

"Are they still among the assets of the bank?"

Largey said they were.

"And you, as President of the bank, are unable to tell us what their value is?" There was no reply, so Mr. Walsh put this question:

"Do you know whether the interest was ever defaulted on them?"

"No," said the President of the State Savings Bank.

The day's proceedings opened yesterday with further testimony from F. Augustus Heinze on cross-examination about his relations with Md. Hodgens. Mr. Walsh was directing his questions to the period during which Mr. Heinze had testified the day before that Hodgens was making threats to him that he would sell the obligations of Heinze and his companies at the State Savings Bank as well as the Heinze bank stock that secured them to John J. Ryan, then the managing head of the Amalgamated interests in Montana. The witness explained that sometimes their relations were pleasant and sometimes unpleasant during this period, which extended from 1903 down to the Fall of 1905, when Hodgens got out of the bank. It appeared also that in the Spring of 1905 he and Hodgens had executed a contract by which, exclusive of Heinze's operations for the account of the United Copper interest, he and Hodgens should offer to each other whatever investments either one of them might consider going into.

The witness explained when Mr. Walsh asked him what Mr. Hodgens demanded of him as a basis for the threats described that it was generally that Mr. Hodgens wanted to be left to his own devices in the management of the State Savings Bank, the control of which by Mr. Heinze was being kept a secret on account of the fight with the Amalgamated Copper people.

Heinze Was Under Pressure.

"Aand he made me submit to many unjust conditions," added Mr. Heinze.

"Was there any property of yours or of the State Savings Bank or its subsidiary companies that Mr. Hodgens ever got or transferred by reason of this influence over you?" demanded Mr. Walsh after a long wrangle.

Mr. Heinze declined to specify, but subsequently stated that a part of Mr. Hodgen's holdings of United Copper stock were obtained under cover of these suggestions that the Heinze notes might be sold to Mr. Ryan. Mr. Heinze also refused to say whether, on the retirement of Mr. Hodgens from the bank, he gave an interview to reporters of the Butte newspapers indorsing the management of his former associate. He did admit that Mr. Hodgens went as surety on various bonds that were required in the course of the Amalgamated-United Copper litigation.

When it came to the redirect examination of Mr. Heinze he said that he wanted to make a correction to his testimony of the previous day.

"I then stated," said he, "that it was recollection that the United Copper Company had at times made loans to the firm of Otto T. Heinze & Co. I find by referring to the books that I was laboring under a misaprehension. The loans were made through Otto T. Heinze & Co. on the floor of the Stock Exchange and not to Otto T. Heinze & Co."

Never Any Losses on Loans.

The witness declared that the loans so made had been very profitable to the company, that no one interested in them had ever received a profit on them, and that the company had never sustained a loss on any of them. He said that he personally held perhaps one-fifth of the stock of the United Copper Company, and that with his brothers he had possibly a controlling interest in the company through stock ownership.

Arthur P. Heine, Vice President of the United Copper Company and one of the partners in the firm of Otto T. Heinze & Co., followed his brother on the stand, and directed his evidence first toward the financial affairs of the United Copper Company and its allied companies. He declared that the Montana Ore Purchasing Company never owed more than $350,000 to the State Savings Bank of Butte, and that it had borne all the expense of the litigation between the United and the Amalgamated for the United Copper and its subsidiaries.

"There never was a time," declared Mr. Heinze, "when the Montana Ore Purchasing Company did not have abundant assets on hand to meet all its obligations, and it never was in any stress during the fight."

He went on to say that the properties sold to the Cole-Ryan combination by the Montana Ore Purchasing Company did not include anything like all the producing properties that it owned, and added that its properties are worth more to-day than they were when the settlement was reached in January a year ago. Mr. Heinze did not consider it for the best interests of the United Copper Company to speak in detail of these properties, but he stated that the Montana Ore Purchasing Company had received in dividends since the sale $1,968,760 from its holdings and had made profits on investments of $3,000,000 since that time, of which upward of $1,000,000 was cash coming from the sale of a part of them. He reaffirmed his earlier testimony that none of the cash received by the Montana Ore Purchasing Company, the United Copper Company, or any of its constituents, had been used in paying dividends.

Says Hodgens Wanted to Settle.

Mr. Heinze declared that prior to the bringing of the present action both Mr. Hodgens and Mr. Walsh had called on him seeking a setlement of the differences between F. A. Heintze and Mr. Hodgens. The more extended conversation was with Mr. Walsh, it appeared, who called at the offices of the United Copper Company in February looking for F. A. Heintze.

"He stood outside the door and beckoned to me in a mysterious way," said the copper man. I didn't remember who he was at first. He asked me when my brother was going to get back, and I told him him the following week. I asked him what he wanted of my brother, and he said that Mr. Hodgens's differences with him would have to be settled or a suit would be brought. He wanted me to telegraph to my brother to return or a suit would be brought right away, and when I reminded him that he couldn't get service on my brother in his absence he said that the suit would be against the company. I asked him what company and he said 'the United Copper Company.' I said that these disputes did not concern the United Copper Company, whereupon Mr. Walsh said that they would have to be fived up or he would sue it. 'Very well,' I said, 'sue it right away.' Then I turned my back on him and walked off."

Mr. Walsh took up the question of the conversation in the United Copper Company's office when it came to cross-examination, asking when the conversation was held with reference to the demand of Mr. Hodgens for access to the books of the United Copper Company upon the refusal of which the present suit was based. Mr. Heinze said that the conversation came after this demand. Then the attorney passed to the failure of Mr. Heinze to recognize him.

"You have met me in various litigations in Montana at earlier times ,have you not?" he asked.

"I may have," said the witness.

"Weren't you present with me for six weeks in the Michael Davitt case?", was the next question.

"I don't remember," said A. P. Heinc.

"And didn't I cross-examine you in the Minnie Healy case, which lasted a month?"

Thought Lawyer Had Changed.

Mr. Heinze said that might have been so. Mr. Walsh enumerated the Nippur receivership case, and the Minnie Healy receivership case, and then remaked:

"You have met me a houndred times, haven't you, Mr. Heinze?"

"I thought you had changed," said the copper man.

"And so you needed some reassurance," Mr. Walsh added. "I guess you were in a joshing mood that day. But what was this very mysterious thing that you saw me do?"

"You waved your hand to me," the witness replied.

"And that was the mysterious thing?"

"It impressed itself mysteriously upon me," said Arthur P. Heinze.

Mr. Walsh before Mr. Heinze left the stand had him repeat his statements as to the strength of the financial position of the Montana Ore Purchasing Company.

"Now ,drafts of the Montana Ore Purchasing Company have gone to protest in New York time and again, haven't they?" he demanded. The witness disagreed.

"Will you swear that they havn't?"

Drafts Sometimes Protested.

"They may have sometimes, when Mr. Hodgens didn't keep his agreements with us," said Mr. Heinze.

"And the agreements were to make loans to cover the drafts?" pressed Mr. Walsh.

"The agreements were to hold the overdrafts which Mr. Hodgens broke and refused us the accommodations."

"And you owed the Clark Bank in Butte from $300,000 to $400,000 at different times?"

"We never executed any notes at the Clark bank; there may have been overdrafts there," replied the witness.

"And at any other banks in Butte between 1902 and 1906?"

"You'll have to be more specific," said Mr. Heinze.

"I want to know whether there were overdrafts at any time during those years," Mr. Walsh declared.

Mr. Heinze said that there might have been obligations, either in the form of loans or overdrafts, in the Silver Bow National Bank, and the Aetna Trust Company as well, but it was his impression that there was never a case where both loans and overdrafts were being carried at the same institution at the same time.

The proofs taken in the hearings which have been going on for the last week here will be submitted to the New Jersey court to-morrow, for the decision whether Mr. Hodgens is entitled to examine the books of the United Copper Company.

TO TAKE THE WATER CURE.

John D. Rockefeller to Have a Plant In His Town House—Playing Golf Now.

John D. Rockefeller, who is now 68 years old, is loking carefully to his health this Spring and to the conserving of his strength. He is not only spending much time in the open, playing golf on pleasant days, but is laying plans for forestalling a possible return of the malady of indigestion, from which he suffered acutely two years ago.

Mr. Rockefeller is convinced that the "water cure" treatment he took at the Lakewood Hotel at that time was a factor in restoring his health. He has determined therefore to have an apparatus for the administration of this treatment installed here at his town house at 4 West Fifty-fourth Street.

On last Monday Mr. Rockefeller played two rounds of nine holes at golf with Willie Norton, a well-known professional playcr. He has also played several matches recently with Charles V. Murphy, a young hotel clerk of Lakewood.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

So far as revealing any new centres of buying or any new market tendencies, last week's business was fully as unproductive as that of its immediate predecessors, and the bulk of opinion seems to be the adjective to describe the Spring season of 1907 in Manhattan real estate will be firm rather than active. There is a good demand for well-located property among both conservative operators and investors, but there is little in the present situation to justify expectations for more than a moderate amount of business between now and June 1.

The ready market for dwellings continues to command attention, last week's transactions of this character having as their feature the sale of a new $100,000 residence on Fifth Avenue, near Eighty-sixth Street. In the side streets east of the Park, and particularly between Park and Lexington Avenues, there appears to be steady demand both for houses of more modern type and those that will admit of remodeling.

No day is without its group of sales of west side houses, and operators are finding these properties an attractive medium for quick turns at fair profits.

Builders show no disposition to prepare for an active Summer campaign, and their purchases, as compared with those at this season in a normal year, are practically nil. On Friday there was reported the sale by Charles T. Barney of a large plot at the northeast cornar of Riverside Drive and Ninety-fourth Street for improvement with an apartment house, and what vacant property buying there is is confined almost wholly to the higher-priced localities. In the Bronx there is apparently only one section in which any considerable amount of new construction is planned for the immediate futura. In the region around the Prospect Avenue and Simpson Street Stations of the Subway builders have found a good market for their products, especially two-family houses, and several of them have recently announced new undertakings of good size. Vanderbilt, married Harry Payne Whitney take in latest dealings

THE AUCTION ROOM.

Both improved and vacant properties are well represented in this week's auction list.

Bryan L. Kennelly's sale on Wednesday will be made notable by an offering of the five four-story apartments on the southeast corner of Sixth Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street. It is some time since property in this neighborhood has been auctioned, and the sale is likely to awaken interest in the locality.

Mr. Kennelly will sell a number of other parcels at the same time, including the old Harlem Hospital site, at 120th Street and the Harlem River, the private dwelling 68 West Eighty-second Street, the loft building at 78 Grand Street, and two parcels on Nineteenth Street, just west of Sixth Avenue.

On Thursday, April 18, Mr. Kennelly will sell several parcels on the upper west side and in Harlem, as well as five apartment houses in West 137th Street.

Voluntary and executors' sales, down for Tuesday at the stand of Joseph P. Day, will cover a wide variety of properties, including 83 Pine Street, near Water Street; the six-story building 52 Leonard Street, 203 West Street, near Harrison Street; 49 Franklin Street, near Lafayette Street, and 89 and 91 Willett Street.

The first important sale of lots in the Bronx is listed for Thursday at the stand of Herbert A. Sherman, in the Vesey Street Salesroom. The property consists of fifty lots, owned by the estate of Samuel E. Lyon, on Robbins, Concord, and Wales Avenues and 142d Street. At the same time Auctioneer Sherman will also offer the two dwellings 171 and 183 Alexander Avenue.

The market is awaiting with much interest Auctioneer Day's great event for next week, the sale of the Ogden estate property of 1,500 lots in the Bronx. This offering, probably the largest of its kind in the city's history, has been arranged to extend over two days, and the attitude of the public toward it will be watched with great interest by those who may have under consideration other sales of similar character within the next two months.

Sales to be held at the Exchange Salesroom, 14 and 16 Vesey St., New York, on respective dates.

TO SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITORS

The first question to consider in buying lots at auction is the confidence in the location of the property.

Second—The present and future demands.

Third—The accessibility of the location.

When this is firmly established in your mind, then do not let any one throw you off your opinion. Come to the auction to buy. The person paying the highest price gets the property, and the price it is sold at establishes the value—not what anyone tells you.

BROOKLYN—FOR SALE.

"HOW THEY PROFIT"

Here is a typical letter:

"Vanderveer Crossings, Inc.:

"Gentlemen—On Nov. 14, 1906, I sold for a client one of your lots, 20x100 ft. 2 in. for $3,500 spot cash, to Peter Olsen of 87th St. and Fort Hamilton Parkway, Brooklyn, who has since put a store and apartments for two families on the plot and sold it for $15,500, making a clear profit of $2,500 in 90 days. Yours sincerely, A. J. MURPHY, Real Estate Broker, 164 Montague Street, Brooklyn."

It is interesting to add that the above 20-foot front lot, recently sold for $3,500, was sold by us to Mr. Murphy's client only a few years ago for the ridiculous sum of $450.

From $450 to $3,500 in a few years, with no trouble and trivial expense (which can remain as a charge to account) is a little better than 4 per cent. per annum in a bank.

Money invested in our lots is almost as get-at-able as money in a savings bank—and a good deal safer.

Send your name and address and let us show you what you can do for as little as $60 or $70 down and $12 or $15 monthly.

ROOSEVELT ATTACKED AT JEFFERSON DINNER

Senator Rayner, Col. Harvey, and Martin W. Littleton Turn Guns on Him.

HEARST'S FRIENDS ABSENT

Places Set for Jackson, Glynn, and Hauser at Democratic Club Gathering All Vacant.

Some 400 Democrats were in the grand ballroom at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel last night to celebrate the 164th anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson and get inspiration for the coming Presidential battle. They were members and guests of the National Democratic Club. The dinner brought together a number of Democrats of National prominence. All the speakers had something to say about the man in the White House and Executive government.

Up at the dais table at the Waldorf dinner were scheduled to sit, according to the programme, State Treasurer Hauser, State Controller Glynn, and Attorney General Jackson, all of whom went into office last Fall when Hearst, their running mate, did not. But the three State officers named, the only ones scheduled to sit at the dais table, were not there. Charles F. Murphy was. There were thirteen at the dais table. The night was the 13th.

It developed during the progress of the dinner that, despite the desire on the part of many of the club members that William Jennings Bryan be invited to attend to speak at the dinner, no invitation over got to Mr. Bryan.

Invitation to Bryan Headed Off.

It was explained that when the Dinner Committee met, it was decided that an invitation be sent to Mr. Bryan. A subcommittee was appointed by the Dinner Committee to take charge of invitations. When the Committee on Invitations met, the Chairman of that committee being absent, a man who was known to be an anti-Bryan man presided. As a result of the committee's decision no invitation was sent to Mr. Bryan.

A member of the club, friendly to Bryan, acting upon what he knew of the plan to invite the Nebraskan to speak, wrote a letter to Mr. Bryan, asking him to get "something hot" ready for the occasion, as an invitation would get to him a little later on, but the invitation was never sent.

Congressman William Sulzer was to have been at the dais table, but he wasn't. Mayor McClellan was not on the list. He was in Princeton, N. J., yesterday. City Controller Herman A. Metz, Borough President Abearn, Perry Belmont, Herman Ridder, and Martin Littleton sat with the toastmaster. John Fox, President of the National Democratic Club, being ill in bed, former Chief Justice Morgan, J. O'Brien served in his stead.

About the dais table appeared the name "Thomas Jefferson," flanked on one side by "1743" and on the other by "1907." Both ends of the room had a liberal display of United States flags. The boxes were full of handsomely gowned women. Just behind the toastmaster was a picture of Thomas Jefferson.

Toastmaster O'Brien pictured Jefferson coming down the halls of time with the Declaration of Independence in one hand and the title to the Louisiana Purchase in the other. He lauded the patron saint of the Democratic Party as he who had made popular government easy and successful.

Audience Cheers for Dixie.

The audience was a bit Southern in its sympathies. "Dixie" got enthusiastic applause. A speaker's reference to State rights called down hearty cheers.

Senator Isidor Rayner of Maryland was introduced. The orchestra played "My Maryland," and the speaker trained his guns on President Roosevelt and the socalled "New Democrats." The audience was with him. He tore to tatters Bryan's Government ownership plan, though he did not mention his name. He preached for a revival of old-time Democracy.

A side remark of the speaker brought great applause. He asked his hearers to consider Roosevelt as President of all the railroads.

"And he would not need any Board of Directors, either," he interpolated. He mentioned the names of Tilden and Cleveland, and their names were warmly applauded.

Senator Rayner on Democracy.

Senator Rayner's subject was "What Is Democracy?" He said the Democratic party sprang from the loins of the Constitution, and while being progressive it should stand by the cardinal principles that gave it being. He said he belonged to a school that believes that the Democratic party will always exist, regardless of discomfiture and defeat, but that the people have not much confidence in a party of negation, a party that is not in favor of anything in particular, and is opposed to everything in general. He said:

"One prediction can be safely made, and that is when the Republican Party has another candidate, and it is bound to have one at some day or another, it will gradually drift away from a great many of his plans and purposes, and it will assume business at its old stand. Then it will be necessary for us to come back to our old principles, unless in the meantime we have so disfigured them that we will not be able to recognize them or to find them."

Senator Rayner said there was a sharp line of cleavage between the Republican policy of centralization of power and subordination of the States to a central authority and the Democratic doctrine of States rights.

He favored the proper extension of power of the Federal Government over matters wholly of a national character, such as inter-State commerce and interstate railway regulation, but he would not yield the slightest fraction of the supremacy of the States over their own local and domestic concerns. He went on to say:

"In the next place, we are opposed to Governmental paternalism. I predict that the day will never come when the Government of the United States will own and operate the railroads of the country. We do not want to own them. We own enough now. We had better sell some things we have than enlarge our holdings.

Government Ownership a Phantom.

"I regard the governmental ownership of railroads as a vision and a phantom. I cannot look upon the scheme in this country as practical or feasible; nor do I believe that the Democratic platform will contain any provision holding out the hope of such an undertaking. Let us give the present railroad law a fair test and trial; and if it does not answer the purposes of its enactment, let us extend its provisions and supplement its remedies so that it will meet any emergency that may arise.

"The Democratic Party must contend for one proposition in this connection, and that is, it must demand a complete obedience to the existing statute. The railroad Presidents and officers of our trunk lines must be made, once and forever, to realize that they are the servants and not the masters of the people.

"Governmental ownership will never come to pass unless they force the issue. They are the real agitators; and I would kindly warn them to further desist from pursuing the tricks and mysteries that have now been laid bare before the gaze of the American people. If I were in their place I would call a halt, and not force an economic strife that is bound to submerge them beneath the righteous indignation of an outraged people.

No Further Expansion.

"Now another proposition: The Democratic party ought to oppose any further expansion of our territorial possessions. We have committed one fatal blunder. The Philippines, these beautiful pearls of the sea, I will guarantee would not sell for a dollar and a half in the market overt of the world. Who wants them? Where is the bidder? Not a bid! Advertise them; call your auction; ring your bell through the continents. Try to give them away if you can. Offer a bonus to any one who will take them, including the Sultan of Sulu, with his mothers-in-law and his first and second and third class wives. Not a nod of the head will you get from the nations of the world."

Senator Rayner said this was not an executive Government, despite the fact that we were drifting toward the principle of executive government insidiously, perhaps unconsciously, but nevertheless with well-defined purpose and advancing steps. The duty of the Democratic party in this crisis was plain—it must set its face against executive usurpation with resoluteness and be uncompromising in its stand. He defined the Democratic platform as he would frame it as follows:

A Brief But Pointed Platform.

"If I had any hand in the construction of a Democratic platform. I would give the country something a little new in the way of a Democratic deealogue. I would, of course, incorporate a plank for a low tariff and for commercial reciprocity with the trading nations of the world. I would then add a plank declaring that there is no such thing as an unwritten constitution; that if it requires change it must be amended, not by Secretary Root, but by the suffrages of the people; and that it is a treasonable act to insert into it any power or grant that is not confined within the well-defined authority and limitations of the instrument.

"In obedience to the Constitution I would then unequivocally declare for the supremacy of the States. I would then announce that the party is not in favor of territorial expansion; that our arms should be stacked, and that while we do not object to this Government becoming a world-power upon the field of commerce and of enterprise, upon the field of war we do not propose to unite with other robber Governments in the despoilment of foreign territory and in the conquest of helpless races."

Mr. Rayner lauded the name of Jefferson and concluded as follows:

Jefferson a Safe Guide.

"If the Democratic Party will only follow his precepts and axioms and not attempt to alter them to suit every economic clique or mongrel denomination that is willing to array itself under its banners, then I believe we shall be recalled to life to resume the duties of our normal existence and to the accomplishment of our historic destiny."

Editor George B. M. Harvey, speaking to the subject "A Lesson from the Scriptures," came next.

Speech of Col. George Harvey.

Col. Harvey spoke in part as follows:

My text will be found in Ecclesiastes, tenth chapter, thirteenth and sixteenth verses:

Woe to thee, O land, when thy King is a child. * * * The beginning of the words of his mouth is foolishness, and the end of his talk is mischievous madness.

The preacher had in mind a ruler, not necessarily young in years, but boyish in mind, in temperament, in impetuosity, in love of excitement, in passion for notoriety, in heedless disregard of considerations born of sobriety and calmness; a daring leader, though an unsafe guide; a possessor of talents, but not of knowledge; noisy, confused, contradictory, inconsistent, illogical, irrational, yet so emphatic and insistent in expression as in effect to pose as the discoverer of all truths, while, in fact, only an enunciator of the principles or fallacies of others; maintaining each tenet with uncompromising arrogance until compelled to abandon it and then shrouding retreat in impregnable ambiguity; a constructive statesman by profession, a destructive politician in practice; in seeming, a chivalric Orlando; in fact, a Bombastes Furioso!

Such the King whom the preacher depicted as likely to bring woe upon the land, whose talk beginning in foolishness ends in mischievous madness! We are told that a President chosen by the people is immune from criticism, that he is a thing apart, a tribune enveloped in the odor of sanctity which safeguarded the Kings of old. Criticism of official conduct has ever been a prerogative of the people. Not so now! The heavy hand of fear rests upon the land. The mighty organization known as the Republican Party has become a mere personal machine. Its former leaders have drawn back affrightedly into their corners. Their wishes are no longer regarded, obedience to edict is not only exacted from, but enforced upon them.

Democracy Cowers Also.

So, too, with the representatives of the party founded by Thomas Jefferson! With substantial unanimity Democratic Senators and Representatives cat the crumbs of patronage from the hand that smote them, and lick the boot whose impact they have felt, while simultaneously their undisputed, if not, in fact, peerless leader, hobbles like a cripple in the wake of his successful rival, gathering as he goes the few scraps that are left of his own fallacies.

But it is demanded, "What hath our King done that he should be condemned?" Rather I should ask, What hath he not tried to undo that he should be praised? The actual accomplishment of either good or ill may be balanced by a feather. The roaring of the lion invariably subsides into the cooing of the dove. It is not the vainglorious boasting, as in the latest speech at Cambridge, of much already done, but the supplementary threat of "girding up loins to do more" that has caused havoc at home and apprehension abroad. It is the illimitable volume of violent fulminations from the source of power that is "choking up the fountains of industry and drying all its streams." Already great undertakings have been abandoned; new enterprises have been halted; the business world looks apprehensively to the future, and all who have anything at stake or aught in anticipation thank God in their hearts for the promise to forego a third term, and devoutly pray, though with no little misgiving, for the keeping of the pledge.

Another Attack Coming!

I say with no little misgiving, because signs are manifest that the "spear that knows no brother" is again to be hurled into the arena. "My policies" is the battle cry, and who but 'Me' personifies them? "All corporations should be accountable to some sovereign," was the language of the message of Dec. 5, 1905, immediately followed by the gracious phrase, "I am in no sense hostile to them." Now comes the unprecedented and arrogant declaration, insulting to a free people, of the right of a President of these United States to name his own successor—the violent denunciation of those venturing to question that prerogative as "conspirators," engaged necessarily in treason against usurping authority—the raging of the revolutionary instinct of a lawless mind! And thoughtful men look on, shocked and terrified, yet non-resistant! What does it all mean? That the American people, deluded by the marvelous spectacle of blatant probity yawping from the pinnacle of self-appreciation, stand ready to welcome the destruction of the very fabric of free institutions? Then, woe, indeed, to the land!

It is in no spirit of partisanship, but in infinite sadness, that we foresee abandonment of principle in a national campaign led by two false prophets striving only to determine which may raise a banner most attractive to the multitude.

Is there no courage left in us? Must time-honored Democracy follow the Republican Party in voluntary submission? Is there not somewhere to be found inspiration to raise, whether for success or failure, but everlastingly for the right, the flag of the fathers of the Republic? May not one final attempt be made to join hands with the conservative South and blaze the way for the entrance of living truth and real sincerity to supplant the hollow sham and glaring hypocrisy before which now in shame we bow our heads? If government by the people must perish and the pendulum be swung back to autocracy, then woe, indeed, to the land! But let us, at least, go down with our faces to the front, trampling expediency under foot, spurning compromise, defying mobs, following the fixed star of undying principle, and trusting to the return to reason of the American people and the working of God's immutable laws for a resurrection that shall be glorious because deserved!

Littleton Denounces Protection.

Martin W. Littleton, ex-Borough President of Brooklyn, spoke on the protective tariff, which he described as the parent of the whole brood of evils, which, he said, besets the country to-day in the organization of great trusts, railroad combinations, rate discriminations, and the good and evil that came with the great labor organizations. Thus the "privileged" classes of to-day were created. Mr. Littleton went on to say:

"If railroad tariffs or rates are founded on favoritism and dictated by discrimination, they do not favor or discriminate more than does the Government tariff. If inter-State commerce is built upon wrong and survives upon injustice, it is not more wrong or more unjust than is international commerce. If child labor is putting a shadow over the good name of the country, it is responding to the avarice of these privileged industries. If the insurance companies have despoiled their trust funds to fatten the treasury of political parties, they are but conforming to a policy long since established by these privileged industries and accepted by the Republican Party.

"If this Government has been thrown into the endless difficulty of a colonial policy and driven outside its traditions in an effort to absorb or assimilate an alien race, it did so under the servile dominion of this privileged class anxious to exploit other lands and other peoples. If to-day Socialism projects its shadow over the face of the Republic, its substance is deep down in the vitals of this protected system. If centralization gathers its strength up from the four quarters of the country and binds it into the power of a Nation, it is obeying the law of development. If growing from a protected system of the tumultuous and disorganized poor are murmuring and mad with inequality, their resentment reaches exactly to the point where the Government undertook the enrichment of a certain class by extending the shelter of its protection to them.

Roosevelt's "Economic Confusion."

"If President Roosevelt is floundering amid the economic confusion of the time and thrashing events and men with a big stick, he is contending with the effects of a system to which his party pledges undying loyalty, instead of laying the remedy at the very cause by striking a blow at the protective system. If he is hot with the fever of economic tumult and swinging in political oscillation between Socialism and centralization, he is but yielding to the irritation which comes from a cause planted generations ago by the policy of his party.

"The influence of this insidious system has run to the very finger-tips of American life. The virus of its vicious discrimination has tainted and stained every detail of American business. The just power of the Nation has been twisted out of place and made to hold up the load of private enterprise. From a great Government, impartially and bravely holding to a perfect level the balance of its great powers, it has become the refuge of wealth seeking and maintaining undue advantage and the resort of lawless labor aiming to have its share of paternalism.

Republican Ship Rudderless.

"The Republicans ride like a rudderless ship under the full steam of a strenuous Captain, and they reckon not of wind, nor weather, nor barometer. The Democrats are resting in the calm of accustomed defeat, but from habit they have an eye to the lifeboats. Half the men who profess to be are not Republicans, and half the men who profess to be are not Democrats. They are following under the attraction of instinct, or the allurement of gain. The line of cleavage is no longer between Democrats and Republicans—it is between conservatives and radicals.

"Our Government must be taken from the debauching influence of protected graft, it must be put beyond the madness of the mob, and the arrogant and mercenary instincts of monopoly. Its feet must stand firmly upon the Constitution; its arms must be extended in equal protection to the life, liberty, and property of every class, and upon its head must be the light of a new century streaming from the four quarters of the earth, transfiguring the spirit and the form of a great democratic Republic."

Importers Are Taxed for Gloves Not Invoiced—Other Decisions.

In a decision by Eugene G. Hay the Board of United States General Appraisers overruled yesterday a claim filed by the John V. Farwell Company of Chicago relative to the loss of gloves while in the possession of the customs officials.

The importers alleged that they received the number of gloves invoiced, whereas the Appraiser made an affidavit to the effect that he examined 838 9-12 dozen. The invoice called for only 314 4-12 dozen. The firm objected to pay the duties on the gloves not appearing on the invoice, but as no appearance was made at the hearing in the case the board affirms the action of the authorities.

Protests by P. H. Petry & Co. and others, and C. P. Shilstone and others, New York, were sustained.

HEARST PLANS NEW NATIONAL PARTY

Tells Independence League of It at Jefferson Day Dinner.

DENOUNCES THE OLD ONES

Would Extend Present Organization to Every State—Gets a Very Enthusiastic Greeting.

William R. Hearst, speaking last night at the Jefferson Day dinner given in his honor by the Independence League at the Hotel Savoy, declared that there was need of a new National political party, and announced in these words the intention to extend his present organization to fill the want:

"Our Independence League Party stands before the country to advocate honest measures, honest methods, and honest men. Let us organize our clubs and promulgate our principles until there is an Independence League in every State and a great National party wholly and unselfishly devoted to the principles of Jefferson and Lincoln. Let us not be discouraged by temporary reverses; let us press forward to the achievement of our patriotic purposes."

The cheering for Mr. Hearst began before the dinner and continued throughout the feast. Mr. Hearst showed some diffidence at the first enthusiastic greeting, but was finally persuaded by Charles E. Gehring, Chairman of the Independence League, who acted as toastmaster, to rise and bow his thanks.

When Mr. Hearst began to speak his diffidence wore off. As he made each point in his address a demonstration followed. When he pictured President Roosevelt "with the big stick in one hand and a contribution box in the other," his hearers shouted and waved their napkins for five minutes. Mr. Hearst's speech was in part as follows:

"It seems to us to-day that neither one of the old parties is true to the purposes for which it was founded, and it seems to us that it is not so important that the empty name of Democratic Party or the empty name of Republican Party should continue to be preserved as that some living party should exist now pledged to promote and perpetuate the principles of Jefferson. The Independence League is determined to erect its political structure tall and true upon the American foundation stones of liberty, equality, opportunity, and independence.

"Neither one of the old parties stands to-day for any particular principle. There are trust Democrats and anti-trust Democrats; there are trust Republicans and anti-trust Republicans; there are high-tariff Republicans and tariff-reform Republicans, and there are Democrats scattered all along the way from protection to free trade. In fact, there are in both parties those who profit by class distinction and special privilege and those who stand for popular rights and equal opportunities for all.

"Political battles to-day are not fought on the real issues of to-day, and these issues will never be decided until some party is formed that will stand boldly for definite principles, that will collect within its ranks all those committed to those principles, and that will rise or fall according to the verdict of the people on those principles.

"It seems to us, therefore, that there is time and opportunity for a new party founded on the old undying principles of equal rights for all and special privileges for none; for a new party that will adhere to those principles, not only in alternate campaigns, but in every campaign, between campaigns; not only in public when on parade, but in private in its inner council chambers."

Mr. Hearst then made his announcement of extending the Independence League to National size.

Mr. Hearst declared that in 1904 George W. Perkins contributed $50,000 of the money of widows and orphans to Mr. Cortelyou as campaign collector of the Republican National Committee, and that in 1905 Mr. Cortelyou rewarded Perkins with a contract for his steamship lines which pays him $500,000 a year more than other steamship lines are paid for the same service, and added:

"So it seems that Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Harriman are not the only practical men in this practical administration. Mr. Cortelyou and Mr. Perkins appear to be about as practical as men as can be and remain at large."

Attorney General Jackson delivered an address in which he urged an elective Public Utilities Commission. He said of this:

"Appointive public utility commissions under the guiding hand of the wise and good Governor may furnish temporary relief, but eventually they will become snug havens of rest for the Aldridges, the Hendrickses, the Kilburns, the 'Billy' Halpins, and the Lou Payns of politics, and it will require another tidal wave of popular disapproval to sweep them and their corrupt institutions out of power."

The other speakers were Clarence J. Shearn, Supreme Court Justice Samuel Seabury, and John Ford. John Temple Graves of Georgia was to have talked, but while on his way to New York he received a telegram telling him of the death of a member of his family, and was compelled to return to Georgia.

DEMOCRATIC WOMEN DINE.

Somebody Put G. O. P. Elephants in the Ices—Don't Mind Smoke.

The most democratic dinner given by any organization of women this Winter was that which the Woman's Democratic Club gave at the Hoffman House last evening to celebrate Jefferson's birthday. Every woman wore what pleased her best. There were women in decollette gowns in whites and blues and pinks, there were women in black gowns and hats, there were women in gowns of no particular color, and without hats, and women with the pretty shirtwaist were there, too.

One of the speakers was a Roosevelt Democrat, and, oddly enough, there were elephants of the familiar G. O. P. pattern in the ices served to dyed-in-the-wool Republicans who were guests to keep them from feeling lonesome. That elephant matter troubled some of the staneh Democrats. They couldn't find out how they got in.

The club had an innovation in the way of speeches, club members being asked to talk between courses before the regular speeches of the evening began, and they did this to a cheerful rattling of dishes and without being disconcerted. Mrs. S. P. Leveridge read a poem to this music in which Father Knickerbocker discoursed upon the evil ways of the New York of the present and cried:

My children have no room to dwell,
No room for reformation;
And when they move outside the town
They have no transportation.

The screed ended with the advice that if the city fathers proved remiss, the mothers should be appealed to.

Judge Charles F. Moore told the women something about Dixey.

"This is Jefferson's birthday," said Judge Moore, "and so I am not going to talk about Jefferson, and you are a political club, and so I shall not talk politics." He gave the women a description of Dixey in epigrams.

"Dixey," he said, "is bounded on the north by the Republican Party, on the south by the Monroe Doctrine, on the east by the Dingley tariff, and on the west by Standard Oil. The people are divided into two distinct classes, which every one not colored recognizes, but I am not going to discuss a dark question to-night. We raise sweet potatoes, watermelons, and politicians, and some of the people raise corn rye and mint, while the others raise cain. We raise oysters and have sent north some of the largest lobsters you have ever seen, and if you don't believe we raise peaches, why, just look about you."

"An important request has been sent to the table," said the President, Mrs. John S. Crosby, when the club had finished applauding. "One of our guests would like to smoke. Thomas Jefferson never smoked himself, but he spent a great deal of his time and money providing the material to enable the other people to. Now, if there are no objections—"

"Consent," called a feminine voice from the floor.

"Very well," continued Mrs. Crosby, "if you don't mind. I was brought up in tobacco smoke myself, and I'm lonesome without it."

It developed that the request had come from a man.

Mrs. Frederick Nathan told the club she was a Mugwump. "I'm like a friend of mine who married an Englishman," she said. "When there is a question of virtues and vices, and this friend is talking with her husband she says: 'Our American virtues and your English vices.' But when she is talking with Americans she speaks with dignity of 'Your American vices and our English virtues.'

"When I see the dirty streets and mismanagement in New York I do not care to be classed with the party in power—the Democrats; but when I go to Philadelphia and Harrisburg I talk about 'you Republicans.'"

"I'm a Democrat," said Mrs. Alice Fischer Harcourt, "but I tried to bribe the man who made the programme tonight to put the name of Joe Jefferson on the programme instead of Thomas, for I have played with the former and could have told you loads about him. But I'm not a politician now." Then Mrs. Harcourt started in and made a good, redhot political speech, with a "down-with-the-Republicans-and-up-with-the-Democrats-forever" cry that brought out warm applause.

Borough President Coler of Brooklyn was on the programme to speak, but did not arrive, and at a late hour Lieut. Gov. Chanler, who was to have made the opening address, also was absent. William Hepburn Russell was one of the speakers. There was patriotic music, and the club stood while the "Star Spangled Banner," "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and "Dixie" were played.

E. C. Dowling Dined.

Assemblyman Edward C. Dowling, Chairman of the Cities Committee, was dined by his friends of his home district, the Seventeenth, in Brooklyn, at the Brooklyn Union League Club last evening.

His friends said that they honored him because of his long service in the Assembly, he being the senior Asemolyman from Kings County, and because of his appointment as Chairman of the Cities Committee. President John Herries of the Seventeenth District Republican Club presided, and State Chairman Woodruff was toastmaster.

In his speech Mr. Woodruff referred to a movement among Mr. Dowling's friends to have him appointed one of the new Brooklyn Police Magistrates, and said that he himself for one would be sorry to see it, as Mr. Dowling's proper work was in a legislative body. He should be returned next time not as Assemblyman but as Senator.

RECTOR LOWRIE SHOCKS POPE

New Rector Begins Ministry by Sneering at Rectory In Which Dr. Nevin Lived.

ALSO WANTS MORE MONEY

Says He's No Sybarite, but is Not So Careless of His Comfort as His Predecessor.

ROME, April 13.—The members of the American Church in Rome have most of them lived so long abroad that some of the peace and contentment of sunny Italy has entered their veins. Life is not strenuous in the Eternal City, but it is happy, and people soon learn the delights and duty of living and let live.

The late rector of the American Church, Dr. Nevin, while singularly devoted to his church, knew practically every Cardinal in Rome, and met them on terms of mutual respect. When Dr. Nevin died it was felt that his like would not again be found, and this has proved to be the case.

The choice, after some deliberation, fell upon the Rev. Walter Lowrie, who as rector of Trinity Church had previously ministered to the spiritual wants of fashionable Newport society. His fair parishioners probably found plain speaking agreeable to their jaded tastes. Here he has been less successful.

Mr. Lowrie has not taken into consideration the fact that quite three-quarters of his congregation have in one way or another close connection with the Catholic Church. Some have Catholic wives, and many have Catholic husbands, and consequently children of that communion, not to speak of more distant relations and close friends.

All, it is safe to say, have personally met the Pope, so that when the new rector begins his ministry by issuing Parish Notes in which he says, "With my reverend brother, Joseph Taylor, (the English of Giuseppe Sarto, Pius X.,) across the Tiber I have no quarrel," they are hurt in their tenderest places, and feel not so much the want of courtesy in such a phrase as its vulgarity.

This is not the only instance in which the old-fashioned congregation of St. Paul's Within the Walls has been ruffled. Dr. Nevin spent much of his private fortune on the church and the adjoining rectory, which, although not large, is commodious enough for a bachelor, as is Mr. Lowrie. Here the late rector entertained royalties and notabilities of all kinds. Hardly a great man came to Rome who was not entertained at dinner by Dr. Nevin, so that it is exquisitely irritating to his friends to hear his successor call the house a "bandbox" and wonder how he is going to live in it.

Mr. Lowrie's first appeal was for money for raising the rector's salary from $2,600 to $3,600 a year and for other church expenses, for which purpose he quoted various Scriptural phrases such as "Do ye not know that they who minister about holy things live of sacrifice." He says also in Parish Notes that Dr. Nevin was willing to forego his wages for the sake of building his church, adding:

"I am not so unselfish. I do not remember precisely what my promised salary is, but, whatever it is, I am bound to get it if I can. Then, again, Dr. Nevin for many years had to habituate himself to live in a house that was in process of construction, so that he became at last indifferent about finishing the details, which could easily have been completed. I, though no Sybarite, am not so careless of my comfort."

In other words, the new rector evidently thought a little of the so-called American energy was necessary to rouse his Europeanized congregation, and he struck the wrong note, showing so surprising a want of tact that one wonders what the future will call forth.

The Trustees of the church are J. Pierpont Morgan, the Rev. Dr. William R. Huntington, Francis L. Stetson, Gustav H. Schwab, and William Bayard Cutting, while among the Vestrymen are W. H. Herriman, Lloyd C. Griscom, the American Ambassador; Daniel B. Fearing, and Franklin Simmons, the sculptor. George B. Page, a brother of Thomas Nelson Page, is the Treasurer. His wife is a Catholic.

The American Episcopal Church of St. Paul stands in the Via Mazionale, one of the busiest streets in Rome. It is a Gothic structure designed by Street and completed in 1870. Its chief attraction for art lovers consists in the mosaics in the apse, designed by Sir Edward Burne-Jones.

Its late pastor, the Rev. Dr. Robert Jenkins Nevin, was one of the best-known Americans in Europe, and it was almost entirely owing to his efforts that the beautiful structure was built.

BRILLIANT GEMS TO BE SOLD.

Wondrous Collection of Mrs. Lewis Hill Placed on Exhibition.

LONDON, April 13.—There were placed on view yesterday at Christie's the dazzling jewels which were the personal ornaments of the late Mrs. Lewis Hill, better known by her first married name, Mrs. Sam Lewis. Such a display of precious stones has not often been seen in a London auction room nor anywhere else. Experts say the sale of these rare gems, which will take place on Monday, will rank with the Dudley, Gordon-Lennox, and Anglesey dispersals.

Viewed as a collection, as they appear in the show cases, brilliantly lighted by electric lamps, it seems almost impossible that they should have been the property of one woman and that woman not of very high rank in life. Great bunobes of pearls, wonderful aggregations of diamonds, superb examples of rubies, emeralds, and sapphires greet the eye and constitute a picture of extreme loveliness. The three most important items of the collection are a pearl and brilliant necklace, a brilliant tiara, and a great rope of pearls.

The necklace is composed of fifteen hnge drops, each comprising a bouton pearl, a large brilliant and a very large and wonderful pear-shaped pearl. The fifteen drops depend from a band of lovely diamonds.

The tiara is a great work of art. Sprays of diamond foliage bank the sides. Twenty-six collet brilliants fill up the centre, surmounted by a great pear-shaped diamond of dazzling lustre.

The rope of pearls is made up of two hundred and twenty-nine gems, every one a thing of beauty, all artistically graduated on a single rope.

The collection, by the way, runs largely to pearls, which are seen in rings, pins, brooches, and almost every other form of jewelry. Every woman who saw the display yesterday yearned to possess the whole of it.

BARTH ON PEACE CONGRESS.

Says Chief Question is Inviolability of Private Property at Sea.

BERLIN, April 13.—Dr. Barth, the well-known parliamentary leader, leaves Berlin to-day and on April 25 sails for the United States. In an interview with me he said that the most important question before The Hague Conference would be the inviolability of private property at sea in war time.

The United States, he said, would render the greatest service to humanity if it would take the initiative, for, after all, the disarmament problem had close connection with the inviolability and protection of private property, and should this question be solved it might make the consideration of disarmament unnecessary.

Germany, Dr. Barth added, would not evade such a declaration, while England was apparently not willing to leave her traditional policy of inviolability. If the United States would lead, Germany would undoubtedly follow. In other words, the present reasons for disarmament were limited—it was merely a phrase. Attention had much better be directed to the causes of armaments.

In regard to his trip to the United States, Dr. Barth purposes to study the development of the trusts and social life in one of the greatest of modern States and to renew the impressions received ten years ago in all parts of the country. These impressions are still vivid and have been recently increased by reading.

"In the future," he said, "I shall study not so much your high buildings as the life of the people. I shall tell my American friends something about the differences between the political ideals of Germany and the United States. The field is so wide that I shall be able to record only some impressions, which I shall do through the columns of the Frankfurter Zeitung.

RUSSIANS AWAIT AMERICAN MONEY

Appeal from Prince Lvoff of the Zemstvo Famine Relief Organization.

AID NOW OR NOT AT ALL

Funds Promised for Next Week by the National Treasury May Not Be Forthcoming.

Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 13.—Prince Lvoff arrived to-day from the Volga famine districts with distressing news. He requested me, on behalf of the General Zemstvo Relief Organization, of which he is President, to forward the following:

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"Our committees which are endeavoring to supply the greatly needed provisions in the famine districts down the Volga await with anxiety the arrival of the money which we know is being collected in America to assist in feeding the multitudes of those who are starving in Russia.

"Until the present we have kept open 7,000 relief kitchens in the nine affected provinces on the Volga.

"The Imperial Government has charitably given assistance of many kinds, but unfortunately it is unable to meet the requirements of the appalling situation, and individual contributions are small. Some contributions from Finland and England are now coming in and this is the only support our relief work has at present.

"The coming Spring will increase the number of those dependent upon us and reveal our resources as wholly inadequate. I beg to say that every kopeck that is given now will do more good than as many rubles given in May. For many help must come now or not at all.

"I call upon you most earnestly to see that the money collected be not delayed, but be sent with all dispatch to the General Zemstvo Committee Bank, Volga Kama, Moscow.

"LVOFF."

I hear from other sources that, should the Government be unable to contribute the 3,000,000 rubles promised for next week conditionally upon the state of the Treasury the relief work will have to be suspended. The administration of the funds placed at the disposal of Prince Lvoff and the Zemstvo organization for relief work has been, in contradistinction with some other funds, efficient and honest.

With the thaw the ravages of famine and disease increase. Prince Lvoff informed the committee of the Duma yesterday that there wer 6,000 cases of scurvy in Ufa Province alone. Typhus is spreading in all the Volga districts. Many relief stations will close next week for want of funds.

STEPHEN BONSAL.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 13.—Premier Stolypin to-day submitted a bill to Parliament providing for the appropriation of $11,500,000 as a supplementary credit for famine relief and asked for the earliest discussion of the measure on account of the urgency of the situation.

The Central Committee for Famine Relief reports that the spread of scurvy and other diseases necessitates a large appropriation for medical assistance.

THE QUAY AT CARTAGENA.

EDWARD VII. AT CARTAGENA.

His Meeting with Alfonso XIII. Not "a Return Visit."

MADRID, April 13.—Alfonso XIII. of Spain has returned to El Pardo. Edward VII. of England, on board the Victoria and Albert, is cruising in the Mediterranean. Both are evidently satisfied with the meeting at Cartagena, which will prove a diplomatic and popular bond between their countries even more substantial than the Spanish marriage.

In the original scheme of the visit King Edward, with Queen Alexandra, was to come to Madrid. But this visit has been postponed until the Autumn, as the health of Queen Victoria Eugénie is far from good, and she would have been unable to take part in any of the festivities. With the canceling of the Madrid visit it was rumored that their Britannic Majesties would not even land at Cartagena, and that all the festivities would take place on board the British and Spanish ships, the ceremonial significance of this arrangement being to indicate that their Majesties would only regard the visit of King Alfonso paid to London as returned when they had themselves come to Madrid. As a matter of fact, they did land at Cartagena and were entertained with all the usual Spanish ostentation and lavishness, although the principal festivities were held on board ship.

In all Spain a more significant port could hardly be found for a meeting of English and Spanish royalties, for more British ships are cleared annually at Cartagena than at any other Spanish seaport. The city is not beautiful to look upon—even the barracks, arsenal, docks, and fortifications seem to be suffering from dry rot—but from its highest streets an excellent view of the sea and La Escombrera is obtained, while toward the northeast is a beautiful valley which separates it from the mountains.

The English King and Queen stayed a full half week and are believed to have enjoyed every minute of the time. Aside from the official banquets and other ceremonious functions several little interchanges of compliments took place between the sovereigns. For example, King Edward presented his Spanish cousin with a handsome riding whip. King Alfonso's present was quite as characteristic. It was a beautiful Toledo sword of the finest workmanship specially made for the royal visitor.

Lord Tweedmouth's yacht accompanied the royal yacht from Toulon to Cartagena, and has escorted it hence. King Edward purposes to cruise in the Mediterranean until the 25th or 26th, and then land at one of the Italian ports, probably Naples, returning direct to London overland. If the weather is fine Queen Alexandra and Princess Victoria will return to Portsmouth by sea, in which case they are to stop for a day at Cadiz in order to pay a visit to the Comtesse de Paris at the Château Villamanrique.

ATTACKS MARRIAGE BY RABBI IN PARIS

Bride's Mother Was Opposed and Now Seeks to Have It Declared Void.

NEW CHURCH LAW ISSUE

No Civil Ceremony Held, and Dispute Arises Over Rabbi's Liability Under Separation Act.

Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

PARIS, April 13.—Out of a clandestine marriage celebrated in the parlor of a Paris hotel between Marguerite de Brodsky and Dimitri de Gunzbourg, a member of the well-known financial family of that name, there have grown legal proceedings which are not only interesting to the Jewish community of France, but also raise several delicate points as to the interpretation of the new laws governing certain of the relations between the Church and State in this country.

The wedding in question was solemnized by a Russian rabbi, Salomon Kohn, both the contracting parties being Russians, and Jewish in religion. The religious wedding was not preceded by any civil ceremony, either mayoral or consular. Mme. Brodsky, the mother of the girl, objected to the match, and the young couple, with the approval of their other relatives, decided to get married during Mme. Brodsky's absence, in the South of France, where she had been called by the illness of her brother. M. Salomon Kohn is a Russian, who asserts that he is a rabbi and has exercised rabbinical functions for several years with the full knowledge of his hierarchical superiors, but who, according to the Israelite Consistory of Paris, is simply a professor of religious instruction who was asked to perform the wedding ceremony. He did so, and the young couple went away on their honeymoon.

On her return to Paris Mme. Brodsky lodged a complaint against M. Kohn under article 199 of the Penal Code, which states that any minister of religion who shall celebrate a religious marriage without first having assured himself that the parties had previously contracted a civil marriage, is liable to a fine of from 10 to 100 francs. Mme. Brodsky's idea being to have her daughter's wedding declared null and void.

The mother at one time had given consent to her daughter's marrying Dimitri de Gunzbourg, and the banns had been published, but later she came to believe that the suitor's motives were not disinterested, and that he sought the hand of the girl because she possessed several millions of francs in her own right.

As the girl is over 22 years of age, her mother has no legal power over her, but the question whether the marriage is valid or invalid has aroused considerable discussion. On the one hand the recent decisions of the courts in Nancy and Toulouse are cited as proving that the separation law does not annul Article 199 of the Penal Code, but, on the other hand, it is argued by authorities like Emmanuel Aréné that if the State prosecutes a minister of religion for celebrating a marriage it thereby recognizes that marriage, and hence violates the separation law.

Mr. Kohn in an interview said: "I am a Russian rabbi and exercise rabbinical functions in Paris with the approval of French rabbinical authority. The French law penalizes a priest who marries two persons who have not been previously married. Now, I am not a rabbi in France; to be a rabbi in France one must be of French nationality and have passed examinations at the Hebrew Seminary in Paris. I have fulfilled neither of these conditions. Therefore, in the eyes of the French laws I am not a rabbi and must be regarded as simply having presided at a family function and not celebrated a marriage. In the eyes of the Russian law, however, the marriage I celebrated is perfectly valid."

BERLIN, April 13.—Although two big battleships are now being constructed, the Kaiser desires the building of two or three Dreadnoughts with at least a displacement of 19,000 tons, the scheme for which will be submitted to the second session of the Reichstag next year.

In May the fleet, under the command of Prince Henry of Prussia, will manoeuvre in the North Sea.

Particularly efficient young officers will be selected for service on the new 19,000 ton battleships.

PARIS, April 13.—Among the tens of thousands of Americans who are coming abroad this Spring and Summer, and who practically all will improve upon the old saying about "Good Americans going to Paris after they die" by coming here before, some concern may have been aroused by the reports spread broadcast of an epidemic of hooliganism in the City of Light. The reign of the Apache is better described as another reign of terror, to the life as well as the purse of the peaceable citizen, who is at the mercy of bands of young ruffians whom the police are powerless to control, and whose favorite weapons are the knife and revolver.

The Paris newspapers for some time past have almost daily served their readers with stories of the exploits of the Apaches, who, emboldened by comparative immunity, have forsaken their old haunts in other quarters and now infest the centres of Parisian life. Statistics have been printed showing that murders and acts of violence in which the revolver and knife figured have considerably increased.

In some quarters the police are held to be to blame. In others, more fair, where it is noted that the guardians of law and order are very frequent victims of the Apaches, the police are exonerated, and the force at the disposal of the authorities is declared inadequate to stem the swelling tide of ruffianly criminality.

In view of the lurid pictures presented by a large part of the Paris press THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent sought an interview with M. Hamard, Chef de la Süreté, head of that branch of the Paris police service whose special task is to deal with the category of evildoers whom Eugène Sue described in "The Crimes of Paris." M. Hamard himself recently received a severe stab wound in the arm from a man he was arresting personally. However, he is not on that account led to take a jaundiced view of the situation.

"American visitors can be quite easy in their minds," he said. "Paris really is the best policed great city in the world. It is quite true that there are a large number of cases where the revolver and knife are brought into play, but a majority of these are incidents where the Apaches are quarreling among themselves. Personally I am always pleased to hear of these, for it generally means one rogue less, without the necessity of a trial and the erection of the guillotine.

"The class of criminals who have come to be known under the generic name of Apaches is a by-product of the vice inseparable from a great city.

"Now the Americans who visit France are respectable people, who are never likely to come into contact with the scum thrown off by some of the whirling eddies of Paris life. So long as the people keep away from the happy hunting grounds of the Apaches and go to bed at a reasonable hour they have nothing whatever to fear."

M. Hamard laid further stress on the fact that the favored prey of the Apaches were "les noctambules," all nighters, who frequent the shady supper resorts, probably drink more than they should, and thus become tempting objects of attack.

"But in other respects," he added, "life and property of the inhabitants and of visitors who conduct themselves properly are as safe in Paris as in any other city. Of course, people stopping at hotels should be more careful than in their own homes, and not leave jewelry and money lying about as a temptation."

In the course of other conversations had on the subject of the increase of crimes and violence in Paris the argument was frequently advanced that the Napoleonic Code, as amended by later legislation in France, was not sufficiently drastic to cope with present-day conditions. Hooliganism in London was flogged out by the cat-o'-nine-tails, but the Apaches in Paris know that the guillotine nowadays is rarely set working, and such light sentences as three to six months' imprisonment are frequently all the penalties meted out for homicidal attacks when death has not followed.

BERLIN, April 13.—Leading German architects writing to the Hobewarte have entered a protest against the decision of the jurors who selected the plans for the Peace Palace at The Hague. They say that had the jury followed the conditions set by Mr. Carnegie several designs would have been excluded.

BERLIN, April 13.—One of the few Germans who served in the Confederate Army during the war of the rebellion was Col. Heros von Borke, who died recently. Apropos of this, a Berlin weekly prints the hitherto unpublished statement that had the South been successful Prince Frederick Charles von Hohenzollern would have been invited to be King of a Southern monarchy.

Gens. Stuart and Lee are said to have favored the Prince, and the Prince himself, it is added, knew of the plan. Prince Frederick Charles was a friend of Stuart and had a picture of the Southern General above his writing desk.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 13.—Cool-headed men of all parties have probably succeeded in having the conflict of powers between the President of the Duma and the Ministry referred to the Senate, which is the High Court.

On the whole, it has been a quiet and uneventful week. However, 70 persons were killed and 200 wounded seriously in the industrial town of Lodz in fighting between soldiers and police and workmen.

STEPHEN BONSAL.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 13.—Premier Stolypin's threat to use the Palace Guards to prevent outside experts from assisting the committees of the lower house of Parliament was put into effect to-day. The guards at the entrance of the Tauride Palace were ordered to exclude from the building every one except Dputies. The House was forced to submit to this display of force.

The sub-committee on the budget discussed the possibility of cutting the credits for the Council of Ministers, as a counter-blow to M. Stolypin's measures, but no decision was arrived at.

President Golovin this afternoon broke off his correspondence with M. Stolypin in regard to experts, after informing the Premier that since he chose to resort to force in order to maintain his position he, (M. Golovin,) not having any arguments with which to answer such tactics, did not wish to discuss the subject any further.

The House will accept M. Stolypin's confidential suggestion that the committees hold separate private sessions for the examination of experts, thus terminating the controversy between the Premier and the lower house.

PARIS, April 13.—No little sensation has been created among those Porisians who have a habit of making a Summer visit to Aix-les-Bains by the report that the Grand Cercle of that resort is likely to be closed up this season owing to differences on the Board of Directors.

As many Americans know, the gaming tables at Aix during two or three months of the Summer are almost as well patronized as "roulette" and "trente-et-quarante" at Monte Carlo, and the closing of the Grand Cercle would represent an appreciable loss to the resort, many expenses of which are met by subventions from the bank's earnings.

Eleven of the largest shareholders in the company which runs the Cercle, among them being the Marquis Costa de Beauregard, a member of the French Academy since last year, have petitioned for a dissolution and winding up of the company, and it is reported that the Government would refuse a gambling license to a new company.
